Mr. Speaker, many Members of the House, and many who are not members of Congress, have offered suggestions, by bills and otherwise, to remodel the banking and currency system of this country, the principal measure, based upon an entirely different theory than that of the Vreeland bill, being the currency bill reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and much more dangerous in some of its provisions, as comparison will show.

The objects sought to be accomplished by it are: First, the retirement of the present national-bank notes; second, the retirement of the greenbacks; third, the substitution of what was originally termed in the bill when it was offered to this House, "national-bank guaranteed credit notes;" fourth, the creation of a guaranty fund by the levy of 5 per cent upon all notes to be issued thereunder, 5 per cent upon the deposits of the bank, and 2 per cent upon all circulation taken out under the provisions of the law, out of which shall be paid depositors and note holders of all banks that fail; fifth, to reinvest the money in this fund by the purchase of all Government bonds now held by the national banks to secure their circulation at a flat price of $1.04. The bonds thus purchased for the account of the fund to be held impounded, and the interest paid by the Government upon them to go into the fund.

It seems to me that the mere statement of the salient features of this measure ought to put the mind upon inquiry as to the practical effect it would have should it be enacted into law. There does not seem ground for reasonable contention that should this measure be adopted every savings bank, State bank, and trust company in the United States within a few years would be forced to surrender their State charters and avail themselves of this act.

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1907 shows that on August 27 of that year the deposits in national banks aggregated $5,256,085,087.14. Deposits in banks other than national $8,776,755,207, a total of more than $14,000,000,000. It stands to reason that if deposits are guaranteed by a fund created by Federal legislation and administered by Federal officers who are acting as agents of the Government as to the enforcement of the law, and as trustees of the depositors as to their ultimate protection, that depositors in State banks, savings banks, and trust companies will withdraw their funds and change their deposits to national banks, thus striking down State institutions now holding in their vaults more than eight-fourteenths of the banking wealth of the people of this country.

In answer to this position the advocates of the guaranty system reply that there is nothing to prevent the States of the Union from passing similar laws, providing for the guaranty of deposits and proper supervision of the State banks and trust companies. In my judgment, the effect of such legislation may retard the shifting of deposits from State to Federal institutions, but not prevent it ultimately.

In the mind of the average citizen the Federal Government is all powerful within the sphere of legitimate action; and the knowledge that the Secretary of the Treasury is the guardian and custodian of this guaranty fund will cause him to rely implicitly upon the safety of his deposit, if in a national bank. And the reason is obvious, because its instrumentalities and agencies for proper supervision of this fund and of the national banks are so far superior to similar agencies in the various States, and so much further removed from local influences and conditions, that depositors will naturally incline to the stronger side.

I now ask this question: Upon what theory of government is a depositor in a bank who, in the eye of the law, is a creditor of the bank entitled to have his investment guaranteed by national legislation? It must be borne in mind that the tax on circulation, authorized to be taken out under this act, will form a part of the guaranty fund. This tax of 2 per cent, should the banks avail themselves of the right to issue circulation—$1,800,000,000—will aggregate $36,000,000. It is true that the act provides that 1 per cent of this money shall be returned to the banks. This would leave $18,000,000 realized annually on circulation.

Now, who would pay that $36,000,000 a year? There can be no dispute but that the borrower would pay this additional tax, because a bank would charge it up to expense, as it would be interested in maintaining its usual dividends for the benefit of its stockholders. So the guaranty of deposits would work out that the borrowers of this country would be compelled to pay the tax in order to insure the creditor class. To my mind no more pronounced example of class legislation has ever been furnished than that of the guaranty of deposits.

Further, I invite your attention to this fact: That the guaranty of deposits is a misnomer. The author of the committee bill has argued that a deposit in a bank is merely a book credit. Following that line of thought a step further we find that there is only $1,113,742,316 (Comptroller's report, p. 49) of actual money on deposit in the banks of this country. The residue, $11,985,857,684, of this nominal cash deposit represents bank or book credits. And the guaranteeing of these deposits would in effect be the guaranty by the bank that it would deliver to the borrower money for the credit which it has previously allowed him.

The proposition is clearly and succinctly stated by Mr. David Kenley, professor of economics in the University of Illinois (p. 345, Review of Reviews, March, 1908), from whose article I quote the following extract:

No clear analysis can be made of the probable effects of a proposal to insure bank deposits by the creation of a safety fund, without proper classification of deposits. The popular notion of bank deposits is that they represent cash taken into a bank by individuals and left there for safe-keeping to be drawn on at need. Of course, this accounts for a large portion of the money in banks, especially in country districts, but the merest tyro in banking knows that, especially in cities, the figures of bank deposits reflect the loans made by the banks. A proposal to insure these deposits is therefore a proposal that the banks shall create a safety fund to secure the payment of the amounts they have agreed to loan either on commercial or personal paper. They have received no money. The deposit is simply the credit charge that indicates their promise to lend or pay on demand the amounts specified. The proposal to create a safety fund to secure deposits is, therefore, in the main, a proposal that the banks be taxed to insure the payment of what they promise to lend. The obvious criticism of such a project is that if the borrower does not believe that his bank is able to pay over the amount he wishes to borrow he should go somewhere else. If Jones goes to Smith to borrow there is a certain absurdity in his asking Smith to insure the payment of the amount he is asked to lend. If there is any doubt about his ability to lend, he should not be asked. In all cases of loans without collateral security the project is a proposition to ask the banks to give security which is not asked from the borrowers to whose credit the loan has been put as a deposit.

The advocates of the guaranty-deposit plan claim that it is the duty of the Federal Government to compel national banks to create an insurance fund by a small tax upon their respective deposits, in order to protect those who deposit with them, because national banks are organized by virtue of Federal laws and are under the supervision of Government officials. It may be urged with just as much reason that those who invest in railroad bonds should be guaranteed against loss because we have Federal supervision, by law, of railroads.

It makes no difference how specious or popular the argument may be in favor of the guaranty of bank deposits, stripped of those elements it stands revealed as socialistic in the extreme, and the inevitable tendency of such a policy would be to destroy individuality in banking and put those who have been engaged in the business for perhaps half a century, and who, by a life of probity and integrity in their business and other relations, have inspired and maintained the confidence of their neighbors in the community where they live, upon the same level with any group of speculators who might drop into their town and organize an association under the national banking laws, paint upon their windows "Depositors in this bank are protected by the national guaranty deposit fund. Interest will be paid on all deposits subject to check. Interest paid on time certificates." And resorting to measures and methods perhaps unknown in ordinary business channels.

I now invite your attention to some of the special features of what is known as the "Fowler bill," for the purpose of demonstrating that as crude and insufficient as is the Vreeland bill, it is infinitely less dangerous to the business interests of this country.

Sections 1 to 11 create the machinery for carrying into effect the system sought to be established by the act. The United States is divided into twenty financial zones or districts, in each of which shall be established an agency for redemption purposes. The banks in these respective districts must select a redemption agency and designate an officer to cast its vote, each bank in these zones being entitled to one vote. The banks in each district shall constitute legal associations, represented by a board of eight managers, selected by the banks and serving from one to four years, two being elected every year thereafter; managers serving four years shall be ineligible for reelection without a lapse of one year. The managers of each zone shall meet annually and select a ninth member, who shall act as chairman and become ex officio Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, receiving a salary of $6,000 a year, payable out of the guaranty fund. The board of managers in any particular district may increase the salary of the chairman and assess the banks in the district pro rata upon their capital and surplus to meet such increase.

The chairmen of the boards of managers are vested with all the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency in their zones, and the decisions of the court affecting the office of the Comptroller of the Currency shall apply to them. Banks, however, shall still make their reports to the Comptroller of the Currency. Five members of the board of managers shall constitute a quorum. The board of managers shall have control of the redemption agency in their respective zones and shall select and designate the number of bank examiners for the district. The examiners shall receive stated salaries, payable by the respective redemption agencies and out of the general guaranty fund. The board shall meet at least once a month at the agency for the district. They shall receive $10 for each meeting.

Section 11 contains the authorization for the retirement of the present bank-note circulation and the taking out of the credit currency authorized by the act. A bank desiring to take out circulation unless located in a redemption city must first make arrangements with a national bank for the redemption of its bank notes. It shall then deposit in gold coin or other lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States 5 per cent of its average deposits during the preceding calendar six months and 5 per cent of the national-bank notes it desires to take out for issue and circulation. No other security is required.

To illustrate: Should an existing national bank have a capital of $100,000, circulation of $100,000, deposits of $100,000, it would apply to the Comptroller to retire its present bond-secured circulation and deposit with him 5 per cent of its deposits—$5,000; 5 per cent of its circulation—$5,000. It would then sell to the Comptroller of the Currency its bond-secured notes for $104,000, deposit $100,000 with the Comptroller of the Currency to retire its original bond-secured circulation, and then leave the Treasury with $100,000 of national-bank notes authorized by this act and $4,000 in money.

In other words, a bank, to effect a change from the old system to the new under the conditions just mentioned, would only be $6,000 out, and yet would have the benefit of 5 per cent on its circulation and 5 per cent on its deposits—$10,000 as a reserve.

In addition to the first issue any national bank, with the consent of the managers of its financial zone, could take out further circulation to an amount not to exceed its paid-up unimpaired capital. It would thus be possible that the amount of circulation which could be taken out under this act would approximate $1,800,000,000, as the capital stock of the national banks of the United States on October 31, 1907, aggregated $909,274,775. If State banks, trust companies, savings banks, and private banks were to come under this act, a further circulation of $1,614,356,524 could be taken out, the capital stock of such latter institutions amounting in 1907 to $807,178,262.

Outstanding circulation on October 31, 1907, was $609,980,466. Of this sum $562,727,614 was secured by the deposit of bonds in the sum of $566,994,910, and $47,252,852 of the circulation was covered by lawful money for liquidation of insolvent banks and reduction of circulation. (Comp. Rep., 1907, p. 13.)

The bonded debt of the United States on October 31, 1907, was $808,685,510.

These figures show that the recent financial panic could easily have been averted had the national banks taken out circulation to the extent authorized by law.

There was outstanding on October 31, 1907, Government bonds aggregating the sum of $291,690,600 not on deposit to secure circulation. The banks had not taken out their authorized circulation by $299,294,309, and they could have purchased Government bonds aggregating $291,000,000, and thus averted the panic by issuing circulation for an equal amount.

It was demonstrated that clearing-house certificates issued to the extent of $154,000,000 did tide over the situation. (Comp. Rep., 1907, p. 60.)

This condition of affairs naturally forces the question, Why the necessity for the adoption of a bill, which contemplates a radical change in the present banking system? To my mind, this bill can be characterized, briefly, as "a bankers' bill," because the effect of its provisions would concentrate the entire banking power of the United States in national banking associations.

An analysis of the so-called "guaranty-fund" provision of the measure will disclose the fact that 5 per cent of the note issue, 5 per cent of the deposits, and the 2 per cent upon circulation, after being deposited with the Treasurer, shall be subject to the direction and control of the board of managers for each redemption district or zone. What will these managers do with this fund? Under the act they must first buy the bonds to secure the present circulation at 1.04 and accrued interest. The residue of this fund will then be deposited in the various national banks; and instead of there being a reserve to protect note holders and depositors, the money intended for that purpose will not be available, because the banks will have loaned it out in the usual course of business.

Section 20 of the act provides that banks in central-reserve and in reserve cities shall have at all times on hand in lawful money an amount equal to at least 25 per cent of its bank notes in circulation, and all other banking associations 15 per cent. Banks in reserve cities may keep in central-reserve cities three-tenths of their reserve and other banks 4 per cent of their lawful reserve in cash, deposit in a central-reserve city or a reserve city.

Section 21 provides that every national bank may count as a part of its reserve the amount it shall have deposited with the Treasurer, and shall be entitled to receive interest thereon at the rate of 1 per cent per annum, payable in July of each year.

Let us inquire in what situation this will leave the so-called "reserve fund." Section 11 specifically provides that 5 per cent shall be paid on the note issues and 5 per cent on deposits. It therefore follows that the amount paid to take out these credit notes and the amount paid on deposits is by this act created a reserve. In other words, a bank not in a central-reserve city or in a reserve city, required by law to have on hand 15 per cent of its national-bank notes in circulation, is to be credited with the 10 per cent deposited by it in the guaranty fund, thus leaving only 5 per cent to be retained in its vaults. The act further authorizes such banks to count as reserve money which it may deposit in a central-reserve city not to exceed 4 per cent, which would leave the country bank with but 1 per cent in its vaults of the so-called "reserve."

To illustrate: Suppose a bank desired to take out circulation for $100,000 and it had on hand deposits aggregating $100,000. It would have to pay $5,000 on its note issue and $5,000 on its deposits, aggregating $10,000. It would be compelled to retain $5,000 in its vaults, thus aggregating the $15,000 required by law as a reserve. Of this last $5,000 the act permits it to deposit $4,000 in a reserve city; this would leave but $1,000 or 1 per cent reserve in the vaults. Now, the 80 per cent, or $8,000, of the $10,000 deposited in the guaranty fund and counted as a reserve would be invested in Government bonds. The remaining $2,000 would be redeposited in some bank, so that the final reserve against the note issue and the cash deposited, instead of being 15 per cent, would only be 9 per cent, a reduction from the present requirement under the law of 6 per cent.

I join issue with the advocates of this measure that there are any conditions or limitations upon the right of the banks to take out additional circulation further than that it shall not exceed 100 per cent of its unimpaired capital stock, if the approval of the board of managers of the bank-note agency where the bank is located is first obtained. Section 12 imposes no further limitation than that just stated.

It may be argued that the power to take out these credit notes is granted only upon the condition that 5 per cent shall be paid thereon and 5 per cent of the average deposits for the preceding six months, and that these conditions will apply to the additional circulation. But to my mind no such conclusion can be fairly drawn.

Suppose a bank having $100,000 of deposits and $100,000 in bond-secured circulation substitutes the credit notes for an equal amount upon which it pays $5,000 into the Treasury and likewise $5,000 on its deposits, and at the end of the year desires to take out $100,000 more circulation, and its deposits have not increased. Can it be claimed that it would have to pay another $5,000 upon the deposits? I do not think so. I admit that it would have to pay 5 per cent upon its supplemental circulation, but under the provisions of the bill it would not be required to again pay upon its original deposits. The second issue, then, would merely be protected by 5 per cent on circulation.

The whole theory of the bill is violative of correct business principles. Its tendency is to remove the actual management of the bank, as far as possible, from its stockholders, who are the real parties in interest. The bill provides that the directors in each bank in every financial zone shall select one of its officers to act as a member of the board of managers. These boards are vested with power to fix the rates of interest upon time deposits. Instead of the directors, who are personally known to the stockholders, directing and managing the affairs of the bank, this power is lodged in a board of managers, one of whom represents directly the local stockholders of the respective banks, the others, perhaps, being total strangers and men who would not have been selected by the stockholders of the institution to manage and take care of their investments and protect their depositors.

One of the controlling features of this bill can not, in my opinion, stand judicial scrutiny, and it is this: The 2 per cent tax to be paid to the Treasury of the United States upon the national-bank notes in circulation constitutes a part of the general guaranty fund. Should circulation be taken out to the extent now authorized by law—$900,000,000—this tax would amount to $18,000,000. Under the provisions of this act this tax will be appropriated to guarantee deposits and the payment of the bank notes taken out thereunder. Upon what constitutional authority has Congress the right to levy a tax upon the people except for public purposes?

It will certainly not be claimed that the levy of a tax and the appropriation of the proceeds thereof to guarantee a creditor of a financial institution that he shall suffer no loss is a public purpose; and I do not believe that there is a lawyer in this House who will maintain that this provision of the act is, in a legal sense, worth the paper that it is written on.

It violates another provision of the Constitution, which prohibits the enactment of class legislation.

Mr. Speaker, after all is said and considered, what is the necessity for the passage of this bill? Because during the past few months a currency panic was experienced, which has, fortunately, been tided over, the American Congress is seriously asked to enact legislation at a time of industrial depression, by which it is claimed more money can be put in circulation when required. But the advocates of this measure evidently overlook the fact that this credit-currency scheme will immediately withdraw from circulation in actual money about $300,000,000. Upon the basis of the present bank-note circulation $50,000,000 will be required to substitute the new notes for the old, and more than two hundred and fifty million would be realized from the tax of 5 per cent on the $5,000,000,000 now on deposit in the national banks. Eighty per cent of this money would be represented by the bonds to be purchased of the banks and the other 20 per cent considered as a reserve.

The report of the New York clearing house shows that the recent flurry in the money market has subsided.

Since the enactment of the national-bank act in 1864 the growth of banking in the United States has been phenomenal, not only of those institutions authorized by Federal legislation, but of State banks, savings banks, trust companies, and private banks.

In 1864 there were 1,861 banks, with—

Loans and discounts, including overdrafts.....	$70,700,000
Bonds and stocks.....	93,400,000
Due from banks and bankers.....	33,300,000
Total cash in banks.....	98,300,000

* Includes cash not classified.

* Includes State-bank circulation.

* Includes coin certificates from 1890; specie for 1902 partially estimated.

A classification of the different banking institutions and of their resources and liabilities is shown in the following table:

Classification.	6,429 national banks.	13,317 State, etc., banks.	Total, 19,746 banks.
	Millions.	Millions.	Millions.
Loans	$4,664.0	$6,000.9	$10,763.9
United States bonds	671.1	22.7	693.8
All other bonds	774.4	2,908.8	3,683.2
Cash	721.9	391.8	1,113.7
Capital stock	883.7	807.1	1,690.8
Surplus and profits	720.4	924.6	1,645.0
Deposits (individual)	4,322.9	8,776.7	13,099.6
Aggregate resources	8,476.5	11,168.5	19,645.0

And the Comptroller of the Currency, commenting upon these tables, uses the following language:

From the foregoing statement it appears that over two-thirds of the amount of individual deposits and the same proportion of investments in bonds, etc., in all the reporting banks are held by banks other than national. About 56 per cent of the aggregate loans of the surplus profits as well as the total resources are credited to this class of banks, while they have only about 48 per cent of the capital and 35 per cent of all of the cash holdings of all banks.

The worst feature of the Fowler bill is that it will inevitably destroy all other than national banks. It may be urged that it will be much better for the country to have one uniform system of banking, regulated by one law, and supervised by the agencies of one central authority. This may be true, but as long as Congress is controlled in the passage of laws by the limitations of the Constitution such legislation can not justly emanate from Congress.

Congress would be powerless to prohibit the States from granting the right to any certain number of individuals, under such rules and regulations as might be prescribed, from organizing State banks, trust companies, or savings banks. Yet if this bill were to pass its effect would be to drive out all of these institutions and destroy them, when we could not have done so directly.

Again, there are certain classes of institutions—principally in the New England and Eastern States—known as mutual savings banks, the depositors of which own the institutions. In other words, holdings in them are not represented by stock certificates. The profits inure to and the losses are sustained by the depositors. On October 31, 1907, there were 678 of such institutions.

As shown by the foregoing statement, these institutions are owned by 7,982,893 depositors. It is a tribute to the character of the American laborer that the fund (created principally by the earnings of all classes of laboring people) aggregates $3,782,873,200.

I do not believe that the majority of this House will register its consent that these vast resources, belonging to the thrifty working classes shall be jeopardized by enacting legislation that all funds deposited in national banks shall be ultimately paid through the instrumentality and agency of the United States. To do so would be an act of cruel injustice to more than 7,000,000 owners of these mutual savings-banks resources. Should such a law be enacted, they would be compelled to either liquidate their institutions and go out of business or reorganize and take out a Federal charter, changing the character of the association originally formed and forcing them practically to go into the banking business, for which they have no inclination and are not qualified by sufficient experience to engage in successfully.

This bill authorizes banks with a paid-up capital of $100,000 and a surplus of $50,000 to act as guardian, administrator, executor, or trustee, in accordance with the law of the State or Territory where it may be located, and vests the power in the managers of the bank-note redemption district, in all such cases, to fix the reserve which shall be held against such trust funds. This section is merely a further illustration that the intention of the bill is to take care of the national banks and place them in a position under the law where they may come in competition with every class of State institution.

I do not believe it is competent for Congress to vest the board of managers with power to fix the reserve in such cases. The local law would be paramount upon that subject. Suppose the law of the State should require that no banking institution could act as guardian, trustee, or administrator of an estate without maintaining all of the funds of the estate intact in the bank, or a certain percentage thereof, will it be maintained that the board of managers would have the right to order a different reserve? I think not. Again, State laws may authorize, or require, trustees or guardians to invest a portion of the funds belonging to the trust or to their wards in real estate. The last legislative expression on this subject was against authorizing national banks to loan money upon real estate, and the present law prohibits them from doing so.

The Vreeland bill, with the railroad bonds—in fact, bonds of all kinds, with commercial paper—introducing the asset feature as a basis for currency, is fraught with danger; but not so much as the Fowler bill, which would in time wipe out the present State and national banking system, introducing in its place a centralized form of banking and currency inconsistent with our form of government.

But there is one thing that I want to congratulate the author of this measure upon, and it is this: He has at last accepted the Democratic position that the national banks ought to pay interest upon Government deposits. On December 7, 1907, the Government had upon deposit in the various national banks in the United States $222,352,252.06. Two per cent interest on this sum would realize $4,447,045.04.

SUMMARY.

Summarizing my analyses of the various provisions of this measure, Mr. Chairman, they are:

It is socialistic because it announces the principle that not only is it a function of government to guarantee all men equal opportunities under the law, but that it is likewise the duty of the Government to enact laws declaring all men to be equal in ability, education, economy, and probity.

It is paternalistic, because if adopted its inevitable tendency would be to substitute for the direction and control of the bank others than those selected by the stockholders to manage the affairs of their particular bank. Under this bill these directors will elect one of its officers to represent the bank on the board of managers. There will be seven other managers—absolute strangers—having no business connection or other relations direct with the stockholders of each individual bank, further than that represented by each manager. This is paternalism in its most pronounced form, through national legislation, and the substitution of officers having no interest in an institution to determine its success or failure.

It is class legislation of the most vicious character, because it is for the creditor class of this country that the National Government proposes, through its lawmakers, to levy a tax upon the borrowers in order to prevent any possible loss to the creditors. There are more than $5,000,000,000 of deposits in national banks only, and more than $8,000,000,000 of deposits in other banks. There is but $1,113,742,316 actual cash in all banks. The guaranty of deposits, should all banks avail themselves of the law, would apply to more than $11,000,000,000 of book credits in the banks. If other than national banks would not come under this system, this bill would still guarantee credits on the books instead of cash, in the following proportions:

In national banks there is but $721,900,000 actual cash on hand, but their books show a credit of $4,322,900,000. It would be guaranteeing credits on the books exceeding $3,500,000,000 which do not exist in cash. (Compt. Rep., p. 49).

It is unconstitutional to the extent that a tax is levied, the proceeds of which are to be applied for a private purpose. The 2 per cent to be realized on these credit notes in circulation is to go into the guaranty fund to protect those who can show a credit on the books of the banks as depositors.

The second issue of circulation authorized by sections 12 and 14 has not the same protection behind it that the first issue has in this particular: In order to obtain the first issue 5 per cent of the circulating notes must be paid, and likewise 5 per cent on all deposits of the bank. For the second issue only 5 per cent must be paid upon circulation and 5 per cent upon the excess of deposits, if any, after the first payment.

It will drive out every State bank, savings bank, and trust company, as well as every private bank, in the United States in the course of a very few years, because of its so-called "guaranty-deposit features."

It reduces instead of increases the reserve to protect depositors and note holders.

The required reserve on deposit under existing law is replaced by the guaranty fund, and only a reserve upon note circulation is enforced.

And, lastly, recurring to the statement made in the first part of these remarks, it is extremely doubtful whether banking and currency legislation is necessary further than the amendment of the present national banking act, in the following particulars, namely:

(a) To compel the payment of interest by banks on Government deposits.

(b) To compel banks to take out circulation to an amount equal to their capital and permit its retirement without limitation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(c) To provide that all reserves shall be kept by each bank in its own vaults for local exigencies.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, about the middle of last October rumors circulated questioning the solvency of certain national banks located in New York City, followed by the failure of a large trust company, precipitated the worst financial panic which this country has seen. It is easy to demonstrate that the reasons for this panic were similar to those which have obtained in almost every other financial crisis in which this country has been involved, and they would also apply to panics the world over. They were, generally speaking, due to overspeculation, overcapitalization, overexpenditures by the Government, States, and municipalities, as well as by individuals; the tying up of large amounts of capital in permanent fixtures instead of retaining it as liquid capital, the carrying of excessive stocks of goods, the abnormal development of business in every branch, all of which led to the credit expansion of the dollar to the breaking point. Many other reasons were assigned for this collapse; and while they may have been, in some slight degree, instrumental in bringing it about, there can be no question that the reasons just given were paramount in precipitating it, and that it would have developed sooner or later, as a result of some comparatively insignificant accident, if the bank troubles referred to had not happened.

Credit having broken down, the natural and usual result followed. Country banks became suspicious of their reserve correspondents and commenced to draw home their reserves, continuing this policy until the reserve which most of them had on hand greatly exceeded the amount which the law requires them to carry. Individuals in all parts of the country became alarmed and drew their deposits from the banks, not to deposit them elsewhere, but to hoard the currency. This process was continued until, to prevent a total collapse, it became necessary for the banks in central reserve cities to issue clearing-house certificates, which action was followed by the clearing-house associations in every reserve city in the United States. Banks in reserve cities, and especially those in New York, have been severely criticised because they did not respond to all demands for currency. The most casual examination of consolidated bank statements would show the most ignorant person how impossible it would be to meet any such demand. For example, the aggregate deposits in the New York City banks February 14, 1908, which include the deposits of correspondent banks of all kinds, as well as those of the Government and in-dividends, were $1,136,827,903.99. Twenty-five per cent reserve against these deposits, which would be the amount the New York banks would be obliged to carry in their own vaults, would be $284,206,975.99.

The New York banks held on this date $258,143,972.43 gold and legal tenders, and their total cash assets were only, including specie and legal tenders, $385,831,662.22, so that if the State banks and trust companies and national banks had called for their balances, aggregating $513,897,333.04, the New York banks could not have paid them 75 per cent of their deposits without still further disturbing the money market by calling loans. Furthermore, the total amount of all kinds of money in the country is only a little over three billions of dollars. Of this, Treasury experts can not definitely locate about $1,600,000,000. Practically 11 per cent of it is locked up in the Treasury, leaving only about one billion one hundred million in all banks. These figures clearly enough demonstrate how impossible it is to carry on any considerable portion of the business of the country when credits are broken down and an attempt is made to base transactions on cash alone. Recognizing the impossibility of meeting this situation without taking extraordinary measures, the New York clearing house, October 26, for the ninth time in its existence, issued clearing-house certificates. The previous dates of issuing certificates and other data connected with their issuance and retirement is given in the following table, which I will print as a part of my speech:

<sup>a</sup>The certificates of all the banks, except part of those issued to the Metropolitan National Bank, were canceled by Sept. 1, 1884, and these were gradually retired as the bills receivable became due and were paid.

The immediate result of this was an expression of confidence, because it prevented the necessity of banks paying their clearings, as in normal times, in lawful money, and enabled them, in case they lost at clearing, to pay in clearing-house certificates; but it brought about a complete disruption of the exchanges between different communities throughout the country. The inconvenience, not to say actual losses, which resulted from this suspension of exchange facilities can not be estimated, but it produced financial paralysis, preventing the securing of funds to carry on ordinary business affairs or to move crops, and resulted in throwing thousands of men out of employment and in reducing the wages of many of those who were continued in employment. An illustration will, perhaps, show better than could be done otherwise the effect which the breaking down of our exchange system has on the business of the country. At such a time, if a merchant in New York deposited a check on a Texas bank in his New York bank, and the New York bank, following the usual course, sent the check to Texas for collection, the Texas bank, being unable to buy New York or Chicago exchange, notified the New York bank that it would credit it with the check and send the exchange as soon as possible. The result of this would be that the merchant in New York, who needed his money to pay his own bills, but had not obtained an actual credit in his own bank, would be forced to borrow, and, being unable at such a time to borrow in the open market, his own bank would have to make the loan, making of it in actual effect a forced loan.

During the recent crisis about two hundred and forty millions of clearing-house certificates were issued. These certificates were based on the assets which the bank actually held, either commercial paper or other securities. As far as statistics have been obtainable, they show that at least 90 per cent of the securities deposited against clearing-house certificates are made up of commercial paper. Against this collateral the associations issued 75 per cent of the market value of the securities deposited in clearing-house certificates, and for the first time in this country in very many cities, especially in the West, clearing-house checks were issued against these certificates. In the city of Pittsburg alone, where the pay rolls are unusually large, clearing-house checks to the amount of forty-eight millions were issued, and the circulation thus obtained was used for pay rolls and the necessary purposes of commercial life, answering that purpose, as far as there is any evidence to show, admirably.

When Congress convened in December I have no doubt every Member came here with the impression that there should be early currency legislation. That, at least, was the talk in the press and wherever public questions were discussed. The President, in his message to Congress, urged currency legislation in the following terms:

Provision should be made for an emergency currency. The emergency issue should of course be made with an effective guaranty and upon conditions carefully prescribed by the Government. Such emergency issue must be based on adequate securities approved by the Government and must be issued under a heavy tax. This would permit currency being issued when the demand for it was urgent, while securing its retirement as the demand fell off.

In a previous message to Congress the President referred to this subject in the following terms:

It must never be forgotten that this question concerns business men generally quite as much as bankers; especially is this true of stockmen, farmers, and business men in the West; for at present at certain seasons of the year the difference in interest rates between the East and the West is from 6 to 10 per cent, whereas in Canada the corresponding difference is but 2 per cent. Any plan must, of course, guard the interests of Western and Southern bankers as carefully as it guards the interests of New York or Chicago bankers, and must be drawn from the standpoints of the farmer and the merchant, no less than from the standpoints of the city banker and the country banker.

Responding to this apparently universal demand, the Speaker, the day after the opening of Congress, appointed the Committee on Banking and Currency. During the winter this committee has given ample hearings on two financial measures—the Fowler bill, which the committee has reported, and which is now on the Calendar, and the Aldrich bill, which was passed by the Senate, and which the House Committee on Banking and Currency voted to lay on the table. These bills are of entirely different character. The Fowler bill would revolutionize our currency system; it would do away with our bond-secured circulation, and it would eventually retire the greenbacks and substitute in the place of both a credit currency based on the assets of the banks. This bill, in my judgment, has many features which should commend themselves to Congress and to the country. It had others which did not merit approval, and which should be eventually eliminated from the bill, but believing, as I do, that this country is coming to a credit currency system, I voted in favor of reporting the Fowler bill; not because I approved of all of its sections, but because it seemed to me that it was desirable that such a comprehensive measure, having so many admirable qualities, should be considered by Congress and by the country.

The Aldrich bill was not only dissimilar in its provisions, but in the purpose for which it was enacted, it being essentially an adjunct to our present currency system, providing a temporary or emergency currency to be used in periods of currency stringency or of unusual business activities. I voted to lay the Aldrich bill on the table because I think it is fundamentally wrong. It continues a system which ought to be changed when a better one can be provided, for it requires banks to carry among their assets securities in which they should not in normal times invest their funds and which, generally speaking, they would not carry if they did not need them to provide a basis for additional circulation. If a bank invested in the bonds stipulated in the Aldrich bill, it would not have the funds so invested available for commercial purposes, and if these bonds were used as a part of the reserve of the bank, as was proposed in the Aldrich bill, it would mean that a debt is being substituted for lawful money as a bank's reserve, a proposition which seems to me particularly unsound. Furthermore, if a bank did not invest its funds in the necessary bonds to furnish a basis for this emergency currency until the emergency arose, it would probably be obliged to do so when the securities were selling at inflated prices, and, in any case, the bank would be buying a security on which it could obtain but 90 per cent of its original cost in new circulation, the result of which would be a 10 per cent loss in the available loanable funds of the bank.

The Aldrich bill also contained a provision, section 11, which would be so embarrassing to the conduct of banking business in most communities that I consider it absolutely prohibitive. Evidently the purpose of the author of this section was to prevent collusion between directors of banks and companies or corporations in which the director had a personal interest. There may be value in the idea, but as worked out in this bill it would prevent active men in every business community being associated with national banks. The very best director a national bank can have is he who is active in the community's business affairs. Such a man is in touch with credits on his own account. He is personally acquainted with the character and principles of men in his neighborhood, and for every reason it is desirable to have the judgment of such men in the management of our banks. These are some of the reasons why it seemed to me the Aldrich bill, although it would furnish, in my judgment, a safe emergency currency, ought not to become a law.

Failing to report the Aldrich bill, not pressing its own bill, the Fowler bill, and refusing to consider the Vreeland bill, it became apparent that the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House was deadlocked in such a way that unless some positive action were taken through other channels there would be no currency legislation at this session of Congress. It therefore became incumbent upon the majority, through a conference, to take up this question and adopt some practicable measure. The result of this action has been the offering of the revised Vreeland bill, which contains a recognition of the principles involved in both the Aldrich and Fowler bills.

It is a bill to provide emergency currency, but it also recognizes the fact that our present currency system is not well adapted to the country's needs, and that if we had a system based on assets, similar to that used by other countries, our currency panics (not financial crises) would very likely be things of the past. The currency commission provided for in the Vreeland bill should report at the opening of Congress next winter a well-digested measure, which could be carefully considered and adopted before the close of this Congress. Knowing that there is great diversity of opinion on such subjects and that a crisis may arise for some at present unknown reason, although business conditions do not indicate any necessity for early legislation, it seemed desirable to provide a measure which would furnish an anchor to windward in case a crisis did occur before a thorough overhauling of our currency system is made. I believe the Vreeland bill answers both of these purposes admirably.

In preparing the Vreeland bill, or at least that part of it which provides for an emergency currency, the committee has kept in mind certain phases of this question in which there has been practical unanimity, and has arrived at its conclusions after considering them, and it especially calls attention to the following:

1. That the volume of currency now in circulation, which is larger per capita than ever before in this country and larger per capita than that enjoyed by any nation in Europe, is quite adequate for the ordinary normal demands of business, and therefore there should not be any permanent additions to it.
2. That if additions are made in the form of emergency currency, they should take such form that the currency will not be readily distinguished from money now actually in use; for if this were done, the very appearance of the new currency might occasion alarm and defeat the purpose for which it was issued.
3. As panics come on suddenly, frequently without any warning whatever, this currency should be prepared for immediate use and so located that it could be issued in the locality where needed without any delay whatever.
4. That it should be so taxed, or otherwise circumscribed, that as soon as the demand for it ceased it would be automatically retired.

All of these conditions are provided for in the Vreeland bill. It takes advantage of the methods of segregating assets which have been used so successfully in issuing clearing-house certificates in the past, issuing certificates against those assets, and provides for an issue of circulation, basing this circulation on the clearing-house certificates authorized in the first step. Practically, the bill should work out something like this: Not less than ten banks, having not less than five millions of unimpaired capital and 20 per cent surplus, may form an association. The name of this association and every step connected with its organization and management must be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. If, in the opinion of the bankers of any community, an emergency has arisen which necessitates additional circulation, the association may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, issue to the banks composing it certificates based on securities, including commercial paper, not more than 75 per cent of the value of the securities being delivered to the bank in certificates.

In case there is any doubt about the value of this collateral the association may call on the bank for additional security, or it may issue less than 75 per cent of the market value of the securities in certificates, and authority is given at any time to demand an increase in the amount of collateral if it seems necessary to do so. Against these certificates circulation may be issued which is taxed for the first two months of its existence at the rate of 4 per cent, and each succeeding month thereafter 1 per cent is added until 10 per cent is reached, at which rate it shall run until it is retired. In addition to the expense of taking out this circulation, banks must keep a reserve equivalent to, and similarly located to, the reserves now required against deposits; that is to say, banks in central reserve cities must keep 25 per cent in their own vaults. Banks in other reserve cities must keep 25 per cent, of which one-half may be with reserve agents. Banks in other places must keep 15 per cent, of which two-fifths shall be in their own vaults; but all of these banks are, under the law, required to maintain a 5 per cent redemption fund in the hands of the Government, which fund shall be included as a part of their reserve. In Germany when, in time of stress, additional circulation is issued, the tax imposed is 5 per cent. In England, whenever financial crises have occurred so that the banking act has been suspended by direction of the Government, the rate of taxation on the additional circulation has been at the rate of 10 per cent.

Clearing-house certificates issued heretofore in this country have borne from 6 to 7.3 per cent from date of issue. It will therefore be seen that the burdens placed on this circulation are, on the whole, lighter, at least for the first two or three months, than have heretofore been borne by clearing-house certificates in this country, or by unusual issues of circulation in the two countries just referred to. Whenever we have issued clearing-house certificates in the past they have been retired as quickly as possible after the emergency has passed. In most cases few, if any, of them have remained out longer than four months. In many cases they have been retired within two months. Therefore it will be seen that the burden placed on this circulation is not likely to be more than about 7.3 per cent, which is the initial rate for clearing-house certificates in some financial centers, notably Boston.

In order to prevent collusion between banks under the same or similar management, or banks having kindred interests, the bill provides that the banks in associations must be located in contiguous territory, and to prevent excluding banks which might be injured in the eyes of the community if they were not admitted to the association near their own place of business it is provided that no more than one association shall exist in any one city and that no bank can belong to two associations. In order that there may be no question about the value behind the currency authorized to be issued by this bill, it provides that not only shall collateral be segregated which presumably will be ample, but that the obligation shall be jointly and severally indorsed by every bank in the association.

It is provided that national banks must have 40 per cent of their capital in bond-secured circulation before they can take out temporary circulation. This provision is intended to prevent national banks keeping out a small amount of circulation in normal times and then taking advantage of the means provided in this bill to supply themselves in case of an emergency. I think it desirable that commercial banks shall at all times carry as much bond-secured circulation as they can keep out while the laws providing for that kind of circulation remain on the statute books. The reserve to be kept against this circulation must be in gold or lawful money, in exactly the same manner as is provided by law in the case of deposits.

While technically there should be no limit to the amount of circulation which it is possible for an association to take out, this bill provides that but five hundred millions shall be issued, and that it shall be distributed throughout the country in proportion to the aggregate capital of the banks in the several States, the purpose of this provision being to prevent the total amount being issued to one or more associations, to be used for speculative or other presumably unbusinesslike purposes, and to enable banks in the remoter sections of the country to provide for themselves, preventing thereby the necessity of drawing their reserves from the reserve centers. There is no doubt in my mind that this would have a material effect in quieting apprehension and preventing the annual disturbances which exist on account of the large amount of currency required for crop-moving purposes. Furthermore, this provision gives the local community the remedy to provide for its own financial needs.

Members may safely base their judgment on the soundness of this circulation by comparing the security provided for with that used in the past by clearing-house associations. During the last fifty years several hundred millions of clearing-house certificates have been issued at different times, but there is not a single instance where these certificates have not been promptly paid, the collateral behind them being amply sufficient to meet this requirement, even in cases where the issuing of the certificates to banks has not prevented their failure. It is proposed to change the plates on which bank notes are to be printed, so that all notes, both those secured by United States bonds and others, shall, in future, be exactly alike—that is, after the stock of bills on hand has been exhausted. This will require comparatively small expense to the bank, and will not in any degree change the present law. Criticism has been made that the present law, making the Government responsible for the redemption of bond-secured or other similarly secured circulation, would be changed by this bill. My contention has been that the Government is, and has been since the act of 1900, responsible for the redemption of all moneys coined or issued by the Government, and I am confirmed in this by an opinion furnished by the Solicitor of the Treasury in the following words:

That the words "all forms of money issued by the United States," found on page 63, line 6 of paragraph 1 (sec. 1 of the act of March 14, 1900), do not literally include national-bank notes, since such notes are "issued" or put into circulation by the banks rather than the United States, and since they are not mentioned in section 2 of that act as one of the kinds of notes which must be redeemed in gold when presented at the Treasury for redemption. But those words in effect include national-bank notes, since section 3 of the act of March 3, 1874 (18 Stat., 123), provides that such notes shall be redeemed at the Treasury in "United States notes," and section 5229 of the Revised Statutes provides that upon the failure of a national bank to pay its circulating notes, such notes shall be paid at the Treasury in "lawful money of the United States." As the United States undertake to maintain the parity of "United States notes" and of all "lawful money of the United States," those terms being embraced by the words "all forms of money issued by the United States," it is obvious that the law in effect requires that the Government shall maintain the parity of national-bank notes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WEEKS. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, but I think it is important. I want to see if I understand this: On page 12, line 23, I find this language:

Such notes shall state upon their face that they are secured by United States bonds or other securities.

Now, that is in the section which proposes to amend section 5172 of the Revised Statutes, which relates to the old national-bank notes. Was that introduced so as to have that printed on all of the notes?

Mr. WEEKS. It was. They are to be exactly the same.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I understand that national-bank notes, which the people now understand are secured only by United States bonds, are to have upon their face the words "Secured by United States bonds or other security."

Mr. WEEKS. Your understanding is correct. That is exactly what is to be placed on all bank notes after the notes which are now engraved have been used.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then will that authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to permit national banks to issue notes under this system when there is not an emergency?

Mr. WEEKS. It will not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then why should you have upon national-bank notes a statement that they are secured by United States bonds or other securities when they can not be secured by anything except United States bonds?

Mr. WEEKS. They can be secured by other securities if the emergency exists.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know, but this is an amendment to the national-bank law.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A permanent law?

Mr. WEEKS. Quite likely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And you are permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to put upon notes issued on United States bonds the statement that they are secured not only by United States bonds, but other securities?

Mr. WEEKS. It is proposed to have these notes issued under this emergency bill exactly like the notes which are issued under the national-bank law, and which will be the form used in future for all bank notes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You have out $680,000,000 of national-bank notes now, each one of which says "Secured by United States bonds." Now, if you permit other notes to go out saying that they are "secured by United States bonds or other securities," then you show that an emergency exists on the face of the instrument, do you not?

Mr. WEEKS. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will bear with me one minute, I believe I can explain it to him. We propose, as soon as the notes which are now outstanding come in for retirement, to cause them to be canceled, that the two or three hundred million dollars of notes now on hand shall be issued as necessity arises, and when they come in they shall be canceled, and thereafter all notes shall bear the inscription that "these notes are secured by Government bonds or other securities approved by the Secretary of the Treasury;" so that when a man receives one of those notes he will not know whether the note which he holds is secured by other securities or by Government bonds, and there is no necessity that he should.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there have been several questions raised about the value of this security. I can only say that in the nine times that these clearing-house certificates have been used in the past there has never been an instance where they have not been paid in full, where they have not been promptly retired, and when the banks have not taken the initiative to get them in as quickly as possible. Furthermore, every bank depositing securities to take out clearing-house certificates deposits its best securities. It would be a serious matter for a bank if it offered securities which the officers of the clearing-house refused to take. There have been instances, it is true, when they have not loaned 75 per cent of the face value of the security, but this law provides that the officers of the clearing-house association may loan 75 per cent of the value of the securities, or less if they see fit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right in connection with that observation?

Mr. WEEKS. I will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This bill only applies to national banks?

Mr. WEEKS. It only applies to national banks.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under the unanimous-consent plan that was adopted last fall the national banks and the State banks joined together and issued clearing-house certificates. Now, if the emergency arises, what is the State bank going to do, from the fact that this emergency currency is authorized to be issued by the national banks, and would not that preclude any opportunity whatever to the State banks to issue clearing-house certificates?

Mr. WEEKS. It is not the function of Congress to legislate for State banks. The State banks can either change their charters, or, if there are enough of them, they can get together and form a clearing-house association, as was done between State and national banks during the recent panic.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the issuance of this currency would preclude the State banks from ever taking advantage of that.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope it would. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Vreeland bill, in its revised form, has been printed so recently that the bankers and business men of the country have not had ample opportunity to consider it in all its details, for I believe, if they had had an opportunity to approach the subject without prejudice, the opinion would be nearly universal that this measure will be useful in case of an emergency. I have, however, some indorsements of the principles involved in the measure, as well as the measure itself, which I wish to include in my remarks. The first one I present is from A. Barton Hepburn, at present the president of the Chase National Bank, of New York, a former Comptroller of the Currency, and universally acknowledged as one of the leading currency experts, as he is one of the best practical bankers in the United States. This telegram was sent before the revised Vreeland bill was printed, and as the last bill contains the suggestions made by Mr. Hepburn, I assume that it would receive even heartier commendation from him than did the one which he had before him when he sent the following telegram:

NEW YORK, May 11, 1908.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

My position on the currency question is well known. I think we ought to have comprehensive currency legislation, but failing that, I believe an emergency currency measure, which will obviate the necessity of clearing-house certificates and a suspension of currency payments in the future, is most desirable. The Vreeland bill, with the amendments you outlined to me, will, I think, serve that purpose. The provision as to bond-secured circulation should, I think, be eliminated, the tax imposed materially reduced, and reserve required against the proposed currency. Not more than one association should be permitted in the same locality. The bill recognizes the normal and legitimate assets of the banks as a proper basis for circulation. That is right, and the bill is a step in the right direction. Perfected along the lines of your suggestions, I hope it may become a law.

A. BARTON HEPBURN.

Mr. Francis B. Sears, vice-president of the National Shawmut Bank, of Boston, the largest bank in New England, a tried, practical banker of many years' experience, and, I think, perhaps the best posted banking man on the currency question in New England, has sent me the following telegram. This also was sent before the revised Vreeland bill had been received by

Mr. Sears, and I wish particularly to call to the attention of the House the fact that both Mr. Hepburn and Mr. Sears took the trouble to come to Washington to oppose the passage of the Aldrich bill, so that their indorsement of this measure is all the more significant:

BOSTON, MASS., May 11, 1908.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
House of Representatives:

I hope currency commission will be appointed, and that it will recommend legislation on lines of bill already approved by committee of American Bankers' Association. Meanwhile, while I do not apprehend any financial disturbance, I regard H. R. 21414 as a practical measure, should relief be needed. I think amendments limiting the territory of associations and making each bank liable for the issue of its own association and requiring gold reserves should be adopted. So amended the bill has my cordial approval and support as a temporary measure.

FRANCIS B. SEARS,
Vice-President National Shavmut Bank.

I also submit herewith a letter from Daniel G. Wing, the president of the First National Bank of Boston, the second largest bank in New England; a letter from Thomas P. Beal, the president of the Second National Bank of Boston, one of the oldest and most conservative bankers in New England, and a telegram from H. K. Hallett, the president of the Atlantic National Bank, of Boston:

BOSTON, MASS., May 9, 1908.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
House of Representatives:

MY DEAR MR. WEEKS: After careful consideration of the Vreeland bill (H. R. 21414), I believe that as a temporary currency measure it will provide safe and effective means for preventing a repetition of conditions in this country similar to those of last fall.

I would suggest that in perfecting this bill banks forming clearing-house associations should be located in contiguous territory. In fact, I think it would be better to give this power only to clearing-house associations in the larger cities of the United States. I think also that a gold reserve should be kept against the notes in circulation, although if this latter proposition is adopted the interest charge should be decreased correspondingly, as the present proposed rates, together with a 15 per cent to 25 per cent reserve, would make the taking out of this circulation unnecessarily expensive.

I hope this bill, with some such modifications as above suggested, will be enacted.

Very truly,

D. G. WING, President.

BOSTON, MASS., May 9, 1908.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WEEKS: Referring to H. R. 21414, I beg to say that I have personally considered the same and believe, as a temporary currency measure, it would be effective in meeting unusual conditions similar to those through which the country has recently passed. I agree with you that the banks forming clearing-house associations should be located in contiguous territory, and that a substantial gold reserve be kept against emergency circulation issue. As to rate of interest, personally I think the minimum net rate should be 5 per cent, keeping in mind in fixing the rate the substantial reserve to be kept against the circulation issued with advance to a higher rate as proposed in the Vreeland bill.

Yours, very truly,

THOMAS P. BEAL, President.

BOSTON, MASS., May 11, 1908.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS, Washington, D. C.:

Wish to urge legislation based on general principles of Vreeland bill with gold reserve. Believe recurrence of worst features late panic would then be impossible.

H. K. HALLETT,
President Atlantic National Bank.

Keeping in mind that Congress is, for the first time, recognizing the desirability of using a bank's natural assets as a basis for circulation, that this bill is practically carrying out methods and using devices which have been repeatedly used before in times of emergency, and that it provides for a continuance of currency reform agitation by authorizing a commission, it seems to me that this legislation should receive the support of every Member of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, on the 4th day of February last, in discussing the financial question, I said that I would not consider it as a party measure, for I was as much opposed to inflation on the Republican side as I was on the Democratic. I have remained firm in the faith since, and I hope grace may be given me to continue steadfast to the end.

I have just received a telegram from the proprietor and president of the largest manufacturing institution in the State of Connecticut, Mr. Henry R. Towne, of the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Company, also president of the Merchants' Association of New York, I think the largest mercantile institution in the United States. He says:

The Merchants' Association of New York protest against ill-considered and hasty propositions embodied in latest phase of Vreeland currency bill, as near as they are able to follow the repeated changes which the bill is undergoing. We believe the vast majority of the mercantile business would join us in this protest if they had time to find out what is going on. We urge no legislation except creation of commission.

(Signed)

MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
HENRY R. TOWNE, President.

[Applause.]

Under date of May 11 I received this telegram, signed by N. W. Stevens, president of the Hartford National Bank and member of the committee appointed by the State Bankers' Association, to come to Washington to protest against this legislation:

In the name of the people of Connecticut and as a representative of the banks' interests, I appeal to you to vote against any and all hastily conceived financial legislation such as has been or can be prepared at this session. The exigencies of a political situation should not control financial legislation. To act in haste and doubt will mean to repent in leisure and certainty. Vote for the commission and nothing more.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, our last experience of inflation was not a happy one. In 1890 we passed the silver-purchase law on a vote in the House of 122 yeas, 90 noes, and 116 not voting. Three years later that law was repealed on a vote in the House of 239 yeas, 106 noes, and 6 not voting.

The law added $187,000,000 only to a then too redundant currency, but a currency having an intrinsic value of at least 50 per cent on the dollar. The Aldrich and Vreeland bills both authorize a possible issue of $500,000,000 of paper money, the Aldrich bill based solely on credit and with no required metallic reserve, but with the security for the note issues held by the Treasury; the amended Vreeland bill with a lawful money reserve forced into the fourth edition, but with the promiscuous securities held indirectly by the banks themselves through their local associations.

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I have only ten minutes. If the gentleman will extend my time, I will yield. Will the gentleman give me more time?

Mr. VREELAND. I can not, for I have not got it.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Then do not take what time I have. Nominally these securities are to be passed on by the Treasury Department, but the bill provides, as it necessarily must provide in the case of commercial paper, that substitution can be made without the Treasury's supervision. In both cases the whole burden of redemption in legal tender is thrown upon the United States Treasury, while the banks which issue the paper can discharge their liability in bank notes.

The silver-purchase law forced the Treasury to a practical suspension, caused the issue of $262,000,000 of bonds, compelled the addition of $50,000,000 in gold to the reserve held against the greenbacks, and, coupled with the existing deficiency and tariff revision, gave us four years of hard times. Is history about to repeat itself?

In the past ten years the banks have steadily expanded their credit the world over, until at length the bubble has burst here, and now we propose to transfer their burden onto the Treasury, and by piling new credits on old credits, still unliquidated and never more uncertain than now, because they are the aftermath of a panic, to try to stop the natural adjustment which is just as certain to come as the law of gravity is to continue in operation. [Applause.] As it was in 1893, so now a deficit in revenues is here, and tariff revision, which will prolong and increase it, confronts us. With the increased appropriations of this Congress the issuance of certificates of indebtedness to meet the expenses of the Government, as the chairman of the Appropriation Committee stated the other day, is sure to come before the fiscal year 1909 is ended, and it seems to me criminal under such circumstances to authorize the banks to still further inflate our already redundant currency and add to the burdens of the Treasury the possibility of being called on to redeem in legal tender $500,000,000 additional bank notes.

The authors of the Aldrich and Vreeland bills say they will not be needed except in times of panic. But the Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, a gentleman whose judgment I respect and whom I honor as a Member of this House, at the Republican conference on Monday night, in opening his argument in behalf of the Vreeland bill, declared that if we had a bumper crop this fall, the passage of that bill would be needed now in order that it might be used for crop-moving purposes in the fall. Again and again during the past five years speculation and gambling in the stock and produce exchanges has forced the Treasury to the relief of the markets, but with the wasting away of our surplus this is no longer possible, and the manipulations of high finance and groups of affiliated and speculative banks will know no times or seasons when the provisions of this bill will not be available for their use.

What this nation needs now is stability of values and not inflation. [Applause.] With its enormous natural resources, if unvexed by new and wild financial schemes, it will speedily recover from the collapse of 1907. From my standpoint, the wisest thing to do is to appoint a commission to go to the bottom of the whole subject, and, studying the banking and currency systems of other and older nations, to plan not for emergencies only, but for such a system as will enable the country to do business throughout all the coming years. [Applause.] To handicap ourselves by a system conceived in haste and panic and adding to the cost of production by a tax of 4 to 10 per cent on our circulation seems to me ridiculous, when, with a proper system of redemption, no tax is needed.

The future of New England at least, as I look at it, is largely dependent upon the ability of our producers to develop and extend our foreign trade and compete in foreign markets with commercial rivals who have an untaxed currency. How can we hope to do it with hasty legislation like this, which, as all experience shows, it will be impossible to change for years to come?

In some respects the bill is a great improvement over the original draft, but it falls far short of a business proposition for the American people.

If the distinguished gentleman from Ohio is right, and the good Lord does give us bumper crops this fall, the cotton and woolen manufacturers of New England will probably realize the effect of crop-moving money taxed at 4 to 10 per cent and ask their representatives what sort of political exigency it was that required that kind of legislation.

Probably the greater the crops the greater necessity for this bill and the longer time required for the use of the money and the consequently higher taxation and greater cost for bread and meat and clothes for our wage-earners. Think of it, gentlemen. One little emergency measure, with eight different rates of taxation provided for in a single section of it. I am told at the Treasury that there is no way to collect the varying tax on circulation issued now against 2 and 4 per cent United States bonds except by taking the bank's guess as to the amount out against each. With more than one issue of these notes and tax rates varying monthly, there is no way possible by which a correct record can be kept, and yet a wrong guess is made punishable by a fine of one thousand to five thousand dollars or imprisonment for from one to five years, or by both fine and imprisonment.

DISTRIBUTION OF CIRCULATION.

In the early history of the national banking system an attempt was made to distribute the circulation privilege geographically. It proved to be a failure, and a redistribution was tried, followed soon by a repeal of the whole thing, and since then no attempt has been made except to deal with each bank and limit circulation to par of the capital. A similar experience probably awaits us now, for all such attempts are useless. This circulation is assumed to be for emergency use, and only when "in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury business conditions in the locality demand it."

But emergencies can not be artificially distributed. Why should the note issues be determined by geographical boundaries? The remedy for sickness should be given to the patient when alive rather than to the pallbearers at his funeral. There are other manifest mistakes in the bill which I am sure that the distinguished gentlemen who have prepared it would have corrected if time had been given them to examine it more carefully. It is useless, however, to specify them, as amendment is impossible under the rule. I am opposed to the bill—

First. Because under this form of association and distribution of currency justice can not be done to the small banks or their safety not be imperiled.

Second. By the segregation of the best assets of a bank and a prior lien on them given to the note holder the interests of the depositors are sacrificed.

Third. The impossibility of the Treasury Department passing upon commercial paper specifically pledged, maturing from day to day, withdrawn and exchangeable at will by these associations, from Florida to Alaska, is so manifest that it needs no argument on my part.

Fourth. The authorization of such an enormous addition to the volume of our paper money will injure our financial standing among the nations of the world and send our securities home, whether it is issued or not, and if issued will throw upon the Treasury a burden of redemption which in times of deficient revenues it ought not to be called upon to bear.

Fifth. The high tax upon this currency will be distributed over all commercial discounts and hamper and restrict our legitimate commerce, both at home and abroad.

For these and many other reasons I am opposed to the financial part of the bill, but will vote for the commission if opportunity is given to do so.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING].

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the time has come when we should lay aside any other consideration, all other considerations, and come down to the necessities of the occasion. If any man here has a desire in his heart to remedy the distressing conditions in which the industries of our country to-day find themselves, he will support this measure that is before the House to-day. The bill before the House is a safe measure. It is purely a contingent measure. It aims only to protect us from a storm that may come. It aims only to meet an emergency. Some gentlemen here are inclined, it seems to me, to go beyond that and expect that we at this time are to offer and adopt a new and complete system of finance. Mr. Speaker, I have always been in favor of a credit currency, and I desire to say here at this time that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] is really the father of that system of credit currency. [Applause.] I desire to say that I think Mr. FOWLER has done more to educate the people of this country up to the idea of a credit currency than any other man in Congress, and it is for this reason that I am sorry to find him at this time opposed to a measure which will eventually lead up to the best system that can be adopted. For my own part I have not lost faith in the business men of this country; I have not lost faith in the bankers; I have not lost faith in those able men who are at the head of our clearing-house system; I have not lost faith in the Government; I have not lost faith in the power of the Government to redeem every obligation that is laid upon it. This bill aims at one important thing, in my judgment, and I desire to say it is the only one absolutely necessary. It is this: I think when this bill is passed and becomes a law that men and banks will no longer hoard money; no, not even in a crisis or panic. I think it will put a stop to the hoarding of money, and if that is the case it will make the many millions—nay, billions—of money that we now have liquid and able to perform their functions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a letter from the President of the First National Bank at Waverly, N. Y., which I will insert in the Record, but one sentence I wish, however, to read to the House. This letter is written to the Hon. GEORGE W. KIPP, of Pennsylvania. The sentence is:

Because the President, Senator ALDRICH, and Speaker CANNON wish financial legislation is no argument for the passage of a measure that is condemned by all the business men of the country, and one which is so unnecessary at this time.

I read that merely to emphasize the fact that must be apparent to all of you, that while this is an emergency bill it is for the purpose of curing a political emergency in the Republican party, not for the purpose of remedying a financial emergency in the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I shall insert in the Record, Mr. Speaker, under the rule, sixteen telegrams sent to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIPP], all of them gave three opposed to the passage of this bill, from all sorts of business men.

I shall also insert in the Record twenty-three telegrams sent to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROTHERMEL], all except three opposed to the passage of this bill. These are in answer to telegrams sent by Messrs. KIPP and ROTHERMEL to all banks in their districts asking advice. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, one moment. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to the insertion of anything in the Record that is not delivered on the floor of the House, in pursuance of the gentleman's rule—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, the gentleman does not understand his own special rule, under which we are gaggedly operating. Leave to print is given for five days under the rule with which the gentleman gagged the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. This is no exercise of the leave to print. It is a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not. This is not coming out of my time, of course. Now, Mr. Speaker, leave to print is given and I shall take advantage of it to put these things in. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE].

The letter and telegrams referred to are as follows:

FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Waverly, N. Y., May 13, 1908.

Hon. GEORGE W. KIPP, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KIPP: Your telegram received, and I answered that I was opposed to the Vreeland currency bill and only wanted a committee. I note that this bill provides for a committee, but the other end of it is so objectionable that I hope it will be buried, and in the services you will be able to keep that part of the corpse which provides for a commission.

Because the President, Senator ALDRICH, and Speaker CANNON wish financial legislation it is no argument for the passage of a measure that is condemned by all of the business men of the country, and one that is so unnecessary at this time.

Politically it would be a mistake, as I see it, and, from a business standpoint, I should count it a misfortune to have such a bill in force.

Much knowledge has come to many of us during this year by the widespread discussion of financial measures, and a committee appointed now would undoubtedly bring us a better measure than could have been formulated at any time in the past.

To my mind, the Fowler bill has many features recommending it, and I am sorry it did not receive more consideration.

I trust that I may be able to see you some time during the summer and have a little talk on financial matters, for I feel sure that you will see clearly some of the practical things that should be put in force for the benefit of the banks and the business community at large.

With best wishes, I remain, yours, very truly,

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not feel that I can say aught that will instruct the Members of this House. If I thought I could if I had the time, I know that I could not within ten minutes. I feel, however, being a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, it is my duty simply to stand up here and give you the benefit of my judgment on this situation as I see it. This is not a party question. It is exceedingly unfortunate that the question has been thrown into the whirlpool of American politics for settlement. I want to state to you that I believe it is the deliberate judgment of the business men, of the bankers, merchants, and manufacturers all over this country, in view of the coming national election, and in view of the divided opinion of the Members of this House, that we should undertake to do nothing at this time and pass this question over to the succeeding session of this Congress and by all means keep it out of partisan politics, and in this conclusion I must say my own judgment concurs. We have suffered enough from throwing our currency and coinage questions into politics. Look back over our history for the last quarter of a century and note the sad havoc in our industrial and commercial life wrought by partisan agitation. Every man realizes, who has studied the question, that we need a change in the present banking and currency system of this country.

It is an awkward, a cumbersome, expensive, and inelastic system, and has grievously failed us, and will always so fail us in an emergency. It does not enable our people through their banks to properly care for the commerce of this country. It does need radical, fundamental changes. It is a bondholder's system, but not a banker's. It is founded upon the national debt and favors a perpetuation and an increase of that debt. It compels the people of this country, through their Treasury at Washington, to deliver up gold to the holders of bank notes. Within the last five months there has accumulated in the Treasury more than $50,000,000 bank notes, and there has disappeared an equal amount of gold from the Treasury. The law compels the Treasury to redeem these notes on demand in United States notes, and then United States notes in gold. This bill, sir, undertakes to issue $500,000,000 more notes upon which gold may be demanded and the people compelled to deliver it. If the gold is not in the Treasury, gold bonds are loaded upon the people. And, sir, they do this in the name of emergency. They say it is not to prevent an emergency, but to afford relief when an emergency comes; not to prevent the storm, but to afford a shelter when the storm comes.

Mr. Speaker, I wish every Member of this House could have seen the look of scorn, contempt, and disgust upon the face of Mr. Forgan, of Chicago, when he was called upon before your Committee on Banking and Currency to give his opinion upon an emergency currency. "Why," he said, "there ought not to be such a word as 'emergency' in connection with your currency. It invites panics and precipitates emergencies." I believe that all who know him or of him will agree that there is not a man in the country of greater uprightness of character or knowledge and experience in banking than Mr. Forgan.

Mr. Speaker, can anybody's reason be so benumbed by a mere political emergency as not to see the effect of this measure in the destruction of confidence in the banks of this country should they ever undertake to get the relief the bill offers? The very passage of this bill by Congress will be a legislative expression of a lack of confidence in our banks, and it will be so considered by all the world.

Storm currency, you say? We have had several financial storms in this country. We have weathered them all. We have weathered this last storm. The bankers got together through their clearing houses, prompted by the instinct of self-preservation and a desire to save the business of this country when property values were threatened with almost complete destruction, values falling on every hand, institutions failing, business men committing suicide, and they resorted to a storm shelter at hand, and that was the clearing-house certificate. Those clearing-house certificates—several hundred million dollars of them—have disappeared. They were no charge upon the gold in the Treasury. No charge upon the Treasury at all. The banks that issued them were jointly responsible, and not the Treasury, and that very reason made them efficient, because they remained near the banks of issue, accomplished their work, and were easily called in and retired when the panic was over without the withdrawal from the banks of a single dollar of reserve money. You put in the hands of bankers in such an emergency, not a clearing-house certificate, not an instrument under their control, not an instrument safe, but temporary from its very nature, but an instrument that anyone can take to the Treasury and demand lawful money, an instrument that when once issued immediately gets from under control of the bank that issued, goes out into the channels of trade, and becomes a permanent addition to the currency of the country, and you have a very different situation, Mr. Speaker, from that where the ordinary clearing-house certificate is issued. Mr. Speaker, this bill should not pass.

We ought, if possible, to get the Government further out of the banking business and not further in, and likewise we ought to get the banks further out of the Government's business and not further in. The Government should not be allowed to lend its credit to banks nor the banks to use the credit of the Government. Above all, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we would be guilty of almost criminal carelessness to add still further to the gold demands upon the Treasury of the people. It is not possible, sir, for any Secretary of the Treasury to carry the gold burdens of the Government without almost getting upon his knees and begging Wall street to help him. He is the slave of the situation and not the master. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to use half a minute in reply to the telegrams the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has put in the Record from several small banks up in some of the interior counties of Pennsylvania. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no "round robins" worked in order to bring any support or resolutions in behalf of this bill. No banker has been asked to support this bill; no association of manufacturers has been asked to pass resolutions for this bill. I charge that for weeks past systematic efforts have been made by gentlemen opposed to this bill. I charge that a letter has been sent out to 6,500 banks in the United States upon the paper of the Banking and Currency Committee, signed by the chairman of that committee, urging banks to telegraph and write to Members of Congress against a great danger, the nature of which they must judge for themselves. They were told in that letter that a billion and a half of bank debts were about to be assumed by the United States unless they should prevent action by telegraphing to their Members. No "round robins" have been used on this bill, and yet more than fifty great bankers have sent letters and telegrams to this city favoring the passage of this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman does not want to leave a wrong impression upon the House. These telegrams I have inserted in the Record were in response to telegrams from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIPP] and the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROTHERMEL] to all the banks in their district, asking their opinions, and not asking their judgment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. VREELAND. I have not brought up the forty or fifty letters which I have, but I have one in my pocket that came in this morning by mere chance. It is from the president of the First National Bank of Atlanta, Ga., with a capital of $1,000,000, the largest bank in the State of Georgia, its president a member of the American Bankers' Association from the State of Georgia. Mr. McCord writes me that he has prepared and will mail to-day letters to every Member of Congress from the State of Georgia urging them to vote for this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. What is the date of that letter, please?

Mr. VREELAND. The date of that letter is May 12, and he says the letters "will be mailed to-morrow."

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman refer to this bill or the bill that was in existence at that time?

Mr. VREELAND. That refers to this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. How can it refer to this bill when this bill was printed on the 13th?

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman chooses to be captious. The changes in this bill have not been many, and those have been mere matters of detail.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mere matters of emergency.

Mr. VREELAND. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill. I believe in credit currency, and I had the honor to offer (and now I am not disclosing any of the secrets of the conference, because it has been printed in the newspapers) in our conference, a resolution, which was adopted, recognizing commercial paper as the safe and logical basis for emergency currency when issued through clearing-house associations. We have got to come in time, and the time is not long distant, to some other basis for our currency than Government bonds. As for myself, I prefer the assets which the banks have to those which they have not and ought not to have. There are defects in this bill. It is a hard bill; but, perhaps, with more of merit than of defect, because there would be no rush to get this kind of currency unless it is needed.

I come from a commercial city, a manufacturing and industrial city, where the lack of currency means sometimes lack of work and means distress in the homes. This bill does two things: It provides that there shall be engraved and ready an amount equal to half of the value of every national bank in the Union, ready upon the deposit of proper securities, so that the wheels of progress will not be stopped.

It provides also for a commission to report a complete and comprehensive system for our currency in the future. Both of these features are good, and because of these features, which no man here on the responsibility of his oath can overlook, it ought to pass. I have received the same telegram as the gentleman from Connecticut did. Mr. Town, who signed it, is a man of the highest character, but he has no constituency behind him that he is responsible to, as we are here. Each of us represents a district, and while gentlemen outside of Congress may and will do, as we ourselves have done when we have been outside of Congress, criticize and say that we would have done different if we had been here, the responsibility of being here makes a great deal of difference when it comes to a vote. I would be ashamed to go back to my people of the Seventeenth district of New York, having had this opportunity to do what is possible to ward off any currency panic which may occur before complete legislation can be prepared, and fail to vote for it. It is a duty that we owe to them. As far as my individual vote is concerned, though there are things in the bill that I do not like, though I am for credit currency to a greater extent than this bill gives it, I shall vote and vote cheerfully for the bill before the House. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in regard to the work of the committee before I revert to the bill, and it is to assert, as I did before on the floor of this House, that no committee of this House has ever done more earnest and honest work than this committee has done during this present session. What did we do? We reported a general bill to this House. Did we try to secure a hearing? The Merchants' Association of New York came here and went to the Speaker of this House with me and desired to be heard, and he said that we should have nothing but the Aldrich bill, because that was the only thing we could get, and it would be useless to discuss the general bill which we had reported. And when the committee found out that there was a feeling all over the country opposed to any general legislation, so far as we could ascertain the consensus of opinion, we reported to this House a general commission bill. What did we do then? We waited upon the Speaker and asked him for a hearing upon the commission bill, but there was no hearing to be had.

What has been the history of the world generally, so far as commissions of this kind are concerned? When the Bank of England act was proposed, it was the work of a commission of twenty-six. When the great depression of 1886 was taken up in England, there was a commission of twenty-three. The labor commission was one of twenty-seven. The Austria-Hungary commission, which took up its banking system, consisted of fifty-seven members. The commission of Japan, appointed to reconstruct its banking system, consisted of twenty-two members. The Berlin silver commission consisted of thirty-one members; the monetary commission, between fifty and sixty members; the Berlin commission, now proposed to consider the high rates of interest in Germany, will contain between fifty and sixty members. Our commission, as proposed, will consist of forty-three. But we have been unable to have a discussion of that bill in this House. I have in my hand a telegram—I shall not disclose the name of the sender, but will say that he is one of the leading business men in one of our largest Eastern cities—which I will read to the House:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 14, 1908.

CHARLES N. FOWLER, M. C., Washington:

Amended Vreeland bill improved, but practical analyses still reveals radical and ridiculous defects. If framers of Vreeland bill value their reputation as financiers, advise going slow; if lenders value reputation for political sagacity, advise referring constructive legislative to competent commission which will command implicit confidence of the people. Vreeland commission will not do this. Democratic orators in the South and West will charge it with being dominated by Wall street. Fowler currency commission would insure square deal to all interests and a scientific and thoroughly digested measure which will strengthen party. It would win public confidence and votes. If you can not do more, amend commission feature of Vreeland bill by substituting Fowler's commission plan. The party will owe you a big debt of gratitude for pulling it out of predicament which threatens to bring discredit and ridicule upon all influential participants.

Now, gentlemen, with regard to the position of the Banking and Currency Committee during this session of Congress, with reference to the other bills before us, when the Aldrich bill came to us we discovered that it was for the purpose of nailing the commerce of the United States to a bond-secured currency, but owing to ten or twelve years of education, there were men scattered all over the United States, who, when this crisis came on, saw that it was a bond-secured currency that brought us the difficulties of last fall; and to-day throughout the length and breadth of this land there is one common opinion with regard to the necessities of the trade and commerce of this country, and that is that we should have a credit currency. What have we stood for? We have stood against the Aldrich bill. We stood against the Aldrich bill and the Vreeland bill, and then we stood against the successive changes up to a given point of the Vreeland bill. What was accomplished? The Vreeland bill went through the first, the second, the third, the fourth, the fifth, the sixth, and, I think now, the seventh edition, and one amendment was made even last night. What were the changes in this bill? Let me recount them.

In the first place, I want to say to this House that the assumption that the bill establishes clearing houses is utterly without foundation. One of the leading bankers of New York, and the man of greatest experience in this land in clearing-house matters, said to me the other night:

It does not even suggest a clearing house. It is crude. It is an anomaly. It is not known to the world of business anywhere.

What have we done by standing firm for principles during this campaign of education? We have, by main strength, driven these men to drop the bonds, municipal and otherwise, as a distinct basis of circulation. We have compelled the Vreeland cohorts to accept commercial paper. We have compelled them to treat deposits precisely as note issues, by providing for reserves against bank-note issues the same as we have against deposits. Some of you Republicans here will remember the debate upon the Government indorsement of this paper. Last night, in the progress of their wisdom, they struck out this indorsement, and now they have an indorsement that God only knows, if, indeed, He knows, what it means.

Now, gentlemen, what is there still bad about this bill? The first and fundamental defect about its badness is that there should never be a bank note issued that is not redeemed by the bank itself. [Applause.] For any man who has any real knowledge upon this question, any idea of the philosophy of a credit currency, knows that the first essential of a credit bill, or its counterpart, is that it shall be redeemed as a check or a draft.

Mr. PRINCE. And none of that is in here.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] took pains to allude to the apparent indifference of the Banking and Currency Committee, saying that no effort had been made to get legislation, and that proper effort would have given us protection against the experience of last fall. Mr. BURTON has been a Member of this House longer than any member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and now, after ten long years of attack and assault upon the superstition and prejudice that enshrouded a bond-secured currency and the breastworks have been swept away, a Daniel appears in the financial citadel in the midst of, or at the end of, a panic, to save the people. But during the long twenty years that he has been in public life, with a single vacation of one term, a little Moses from among the bullfrogs and the bull-rushes along the rivers and harbors of the country, dreaming upon commercial crises, appears. Has he ever found time in twenty years to send a bill to the Banking and Currency Committee pointing out the way of escape? Not a suggestion. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, I am opposed to this bill and shall vote against it for the following reasons:

First. There is no need of any legislation at this time; and any law now put upon the statute books of a makeshift character, such as this bill is admitted to be even by its advocates, will only prove another stumbling block, if not an insurmountable obstacle, to a real reform of our financial and currency practices.

Second. It is an economic blunder to authorize any bank-note circulation without at the same time providing for adequate and automatic redemptions of the notes, precisely as checks and drafts are paid.

Third. There is no such thing as an emergency currency in a properly constituted currency system which of itself would prevent any emergency arising. This principle is admitted by the imposition of a tax ranging from 4 per cent to 10 per cent upon these notes, when there should no more be a tax upon bank notes than upon deposits, for there is absolutely no difference in principle between bank deposits and bank notes and a tax upon either is a tax upon production, and a tax upon production is a tax upon labor.

Fourth. This bill, in its operation, would exclude at least nine-tenths of the banks of the country, favoring the centers as against the country districts, where the greatest need of currency often exists.

Fifth. To segregate a large part of the best assets of a bank for note issue and subject them to sale in time of panic would be a serious, unfair, and possibly ruinous discrimination against the depositors of a bank.

Sixth. Instead of removing the burden of the redemption of $700,000,000 of bank notes now resting upon the United States Treasury directly to the banks themselves, this bill adds a possible additional burden of $500,000,000 of bank notes and necessarily imperils the national credit. The result will be to compel the Government to sell bonds to redeem the bank notes with absolute certainty in the event of a deficit which is sure to follow business distress, and in the event of war may be the means of forcing the Government off the gold standard and to a credit basis.

In support of this proposition, I quote the words of Ex-Secretary Lyman J. Gage before the Committee on Banking and Currency:

In my statement before the House, I enumerated these weaknesses as, first, the present demand obligations outstanding against the Treasury under the name of legal-tender notes, $346,000,000; second, the Government guaranty on $700,000,000 of bank notes.

To be sure the Treasury holds as security for this undertaking a similar amount of its own bonds, but everyone knows that by this artificial contrivance the bonds so held are overvalued when put to the test in a free market by 20 or 25 per cent. The issue of millions of new bonds to meet the costs of war would strip the mask which now conceals the fact and expose the weakness at the moment when greatest strength would be required. Thus nature revenges herself on the unwise and imprudent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I now yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the question now under consideration is one in which the people of the whole country are deeply interested. It is one which affects every interest and every individual. There is no question of greater importance before the American people than that affecting the character of its circulating medium. It is with some reluctance that I assume to participate in the discussion. I realize the difficulty experienced by experts in dealing with the currency question. Currency experts differ on the question of what is best to do almost as radically as doctors or lawyers. How, then, can one who makes no claim of expert knowledge hope to be able to add anything to the discussion which has already taken place? My apology for assuming to take the time of the House must be the deep interest which I feel in the outcome of the legislation which is under consideration.

A number of measures have been introduced. Each possesses many good features. All are subject to more or less objection, but I am sure that it is the general opinion that the necessity exists for currency legislation, and the Vreeland bill seems to me to meet the case better than any thus far proposed.

The serious objection to the Aldrich bill is that the class of bonds specified are not largely held by national banks. To take out circulation based upon such bonds, the banks would be forced to buy them at a time when cash was scarce, and, too, it is a serious question whether it would be prudent to buy such securities at par or over for the privilege of issuing circulating notes to the extent of 75 per cent of their value.

The great demand for such bonds in times of emergency would inevitably increase their price on the market, whereas after the emergency was over the market value would just as surely fall, thus causing great loss to those who were obliged to sell them when the necessity no longer existed for their retention as security for the additional circulation taken out to meet the country's pressing business needs.

It is estimated that the amount of municipal, county, and State bonds held does not exceed 10 per cent of the total bonds and securities of all kinds held by the national banks of the country; so that it will be seen that if the banks were to undertake to issue notes thus secured they would be obliged to buy on a very large scale, besides the necessary disposition of other securities to obtain the money for the purchase of the bonds would have a demoralizing effect on the banking business generally.

Much of the reluctance of Congress to provide an emergency currency is undoubtedly attributable to the lack of understanding of the principles and practice of banking which it is believed exists in the public mind, as well as to a sincere desire to do only that which it is believed will meet with popular approval and at the same time prevent a recurrence of the conditions which befell the nation last October.

It must be clear to gentlemen that with but $3,396,653,082 in circulation in the United States, while the deposits aggregate practically $14,000,000,000, it would require $10,000,000,000 more money than there is in the country to pay all the depositors what is due them in cash. It must be equally clear that but a small percentage of deposits are made in cash. They consist of checks, drafts, notes, coupons, bills of exchange, and various other instruments of credit and are, as a matter of fact, but mediums of exchange which entitle the depositor to so much credit on the books of the bank, against which he may draw his checks from time to time in the settlement of accounts contracted in the ordinary course of business.

It must be remembered that the banker is not possessed of the universal solvent which enables him to convert the baser metals into gold, nor can he be expected to transmute all the forms of credit deposited in the bank into lawful money. If we bear in mind the fact that for every dollar on deposit there is but 25 cents in circulation, we will easily understand the impossibility of paying every obligation in money on demand, and we will be the better prepared to realize the importance of enacting some legislation to provide the means of obtaining from the Government an emergency circulation based on the security of commercial paper, an abundance of which the banks have in their possession. How can the banks proceed to do this if the law permitting it is passed? There is but one way; that is through the Government, by pledging their assets in exchange for currency, which only the Government can issue. Some call this inflation, but I do not consider it such, unless it be concluded that the commercial system upon which the world's trade is carried on is itself inflation.

The banker is an important factor in the world's commerce. He is one of the instrumentalities through which the commercial supremacy of the country is maintained.

The Vreeland bill proposes to authorize national banks not less than ten in number, having a combined capital and surplus of not less than $5,000,000, to form voluntary associations throughout the country, such associations to be designated as "national clearing-house associations."

The banks uniting to form such associations shall, by their presidents and vice-presidents, acting under authority from the board of directors, make and file with the Secretary of the Treasury a certificate setting forth the names of the banks composing the association, the principal place of business of the association, and the name of the association, which name shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon the filing of such certificate the banks therein named shall become a body corporate, and by the name so designated may sue and be sued and exercise the powers of a body corporate.

The bill provides that the associations shall be organized by banks to be taken, as nearly as conveniently may be, from territory composed of a State or a part of a State, or contiguous parts of one or more States; that the affairs of each association shall be managed by a board of directors consisting of one representative from each bank. The by-laws for the government of the association shall be made by the board, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, and an executive committee of not less than five members shall be elected by the board; that the powers of such board, except in the election of officers and making the by-laws, may be exercised through its executive committee. For the purpose of obtaining additional circulation any bank belonging to a national clearing-house association having circulating notes outstanding secured by the deposit of bonds of the United States to an amount not less than 40 per cent of its capital stock, and which has a capital and unimpaired surplus of not less than 20 per cent, may deposit with and transfer to the association, in trust, any securities, including commercial paper, held by it as may be satisfactory to the board of the association. The officers of the association may thereupon, in behalf of such bank, make application to the Comptroller of the Currency for an issue of additional circulating notes to an amount not exceeding 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities or commercial paper so deposited. The Comptroller of the Currency shall immediately transmit such application to the Secretary of the Treasury, with such recommendation as he thinks proper, and if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, business conditions in the locality demand additional circulation, and if he be satisfied that a lien in favor of the United States on the securities so deposited and on the assets of the banks composing the association will be amply sufficient for the protection of the United States, he shall direct an issue of additional circulating notes to the association on behalf of such bank to an amount not exceeding 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities so deposited.

The bill provides that the assets of all banks belonging to the association shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for the redemption of such additional circulation, and the lien of the United States shall extend to and cover the assets of all banks belonging to the association and to the securities deposited by the banks with the association, but as between the several banks composing such association each bank shall be liable only in the proportion that its capital and surplus bears to the aggregate capital and surplus of all such banks. The association may, at any time, require of any of its constituent banks a deposit of additional securities or commercial paper to secure such additional circulation. Upon the failure of such bank to make such deposit the association may, after ten days' notice to the bank, sell the securities and papers already in its hands at public sale and deposit the proceeds with the Treasurer of the United States as a fund for the redemption of such additional circulation.

The bill provides that additional circulating notes issued under the act shall be used, held, and treated in the same way as circulating notes of national banking associations heretofore issued and secured by a deposit of United States bonds, and shall be subject to all provisions of law affecting such notes.

It provides further that the amount of circulating notes outstanding of any national banking association, including notes secured by United States bonds as now provided by law, and notes secured otherwise than by deposit of such bonds, shall not at any time exceed the amount of its unimpaired capital and surplus, and that there shall not be outstanding at any time circulating notes issued by all the banks to an amount of more than $500,000,000.

The national banking laws at present require the deposit of a 5 per cent redemption fund. This feature of the law is to remain in force, and it is provided that whenever any bank belonging to a national clearing-house association shall fail to preserve or make good its 5 per cent redemption fund in the Treasury of the United States, the Treasurer of the United States shall notify such national clearing-house association to make good such redemption fund and upon the failure of such national clearing-house association to make good such fund the Treasurer of the United States may, in his discretion, apply so much of the 5 per cent redemption fund belonging to the other banks composing such national clearing-house association as may be necessary for that purpose; and such national clearing-house association may, after five days' notice to such bank, proceed to sell at public sale the securities deposited by such bank with the association and deposit the proceeds with the Treasurer of the United States as a fund for the redemption of the additional circulation taken out by such bank.

The bill provides also that each and every bank in such clearing-house association located in a city designated as a "central reserve city," under section 5186 of the Revised Statutes and section 1 of the act of March 3, 1887, chapter 387, shall have on hand at all times in gold or lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least 25 per cent of the total amount of the additional circulation which it may have taken out under the act, and that each and every bank situated in a city designated as a "reserve city" under section 5191 of the Revised Statutes, or any act amendatory thereof, shall have on hand at all times in like money, the like sum of 25 per cent of such additional circulation, of which sum one-half may consist of cash deposits in such "central reserve cities." All other banks in such association shall have on hand at all times in like money, an amount equal to at least 15 per cent of such additional circulation, of which sum nine-fifteenths may consist of cash deposits in "reserve cities."

The bill provides also that in order that the distribution of notes to be issued under the provisions of the act shall be made as equitable as practicable between the various sections of the country, the Secretary of the Treasury shall not approve applications from associations in any State in excess of the amount to which the State would be entitled of the additional notes authorized on the basis of the proportion which the unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations in such State bears to the total amount of unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations of the United States, and it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, in case the applications from associations in any State shall not equal the amount which the association of such State would be entitled to under this method of distribution, in his discretion, to meet an emergency, to assign the amount not thus applied for to any applying association or associations in States in the same section of the country, so that it will be seen that each section of the country will be independent of every other section in the matter of currency in a case of emergency. For example, it will not be possible for New York to absorb all the currency authorized to be issued in an emergency. It could only secure currency equivalent to the capital and surplus of its national banks, less the amount already in circulation secured by United States bonds, which must, under the provisions of the act, amount to 40 per cent of the capital of the national banks before advantage can be taken of the terms of this bill; so that if New York, by any chance, should find itself in financial trouble, it would not necessarily affect Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Kansas City, or other sections of the country, for each of these sections would have the independent right to take out circulating notes equivalent to the amount of capital and unimpaired surplus which their national banks represented.

The features of safety involved in this method of distributing the circulating medium in cases of emergency might be compared to an ocean liner built on the water-tight compartment plan. Each compartment of the ship would act as a separate factor of safety. If by any chance any one compartment was damaged, the damage would not affect the ship itself, for the other compartments which were intact would enable the ship to reach its destination in safety; and thus it is that each section of the country is authorized, under this bill, to secure its own currency in proportion to its national-bank capital and is in a position to meet all the commercial needs of the section without fear of embarrassment from any trouble which may involve the banks of any other section.

This bill provides that for all circulating notes taken out under its provisions the bank shall pay 4 per cent interest the first month, 5 per cent the second, 6 per cent the third, 7 per cent the fourth, 8 per cent the fifth, 9 per cent the sixth, 10 per cent for the seventh and all succeeding months. This charge would make it unprofitable for banks to keep the notes in circulation when there was no emergency, and it is therefore certain that no inflation would follow.

The bill further provides for the payment of interest to the United States at the rate of 1 per cent on all Government moneys deposited in national banks. This is a step in the right direction. The friends of the bill recognize the importance of giving the financial needs of the country a more exhaustive study, and to that end a provision has been made for the appointment of a national currency commission, to consist of eighteen members—six members of the Senate, six from the House, and six other persons not members of either body—whose duty it shall be to investigate carefully the causes of the recent financial crisis and its relation to currency and banking systems, and make recommendations to Congress for such changes in the existing banking and currency system as may in their opinion be desirable.

I contend that if this measure is enacted into law that such a panic as the country witnessed last fall will be impossible. There can be no chance for loss either to the depositor, to the banks, or to the Government. This plan is sane, safe, and workable; it fits the case; it meets a long-felt want. It is beyond question the logical remedy for conditions of panic.

Mr. Speaker, I wish, in addition to what I have already said, to urge the passage of a postal savings bank law, and if I may have the attention of the House for a short time longer, I desire to point out a few reasons which seem to me to be absolutely incontrovertible why the United States should adopt a postal savings bank system. The subject should need no argument, however, to commend itself to the attention of reasonable and fair-thinking public men, for it is one which is extremely interesting and attractive, and one through and by which the wage-earners of this country can be encouraged to save their small earnings, thereby learning that great principle of economy, an adherence to which will make them good and patriotic citizens and save them in old age from penury and want.

It is to the great English statesman, Gladstone, that the world is indebted for these popular savings banks, and had that superior leader no other claim to the admiration and respect of mankind, his memory would be revered and his name would be honored forever.

Mr. Speaker, it is the majesty of a cause which gives it world-wide popularity, and causes which produce popular blessings are majestic. Gladstone knew this, and, superior to the influence which usually makes men hard-hearted and indifferent to the welfare of the people, and with an eye ever single to the betterment of his countrymen, he gave to them this splendid system of economics, a system which will ever shed luster upon his fame and character.

Mr. Speaker, if we would make our strong Government stronger, if we would make our patriotic citizens more patriotic, if we would inculcate a spirit of thrift among the wage-earners and teach them the inestimable blessings derived from a judicious investment of their small earnings, we would not, as representative men, longer delay the adoption of the safe, sound, and sure method this beneficent postal savings system affords.

Heretofore and at the present time the tariff system affords the means by which the Republican party is able to render unto the toiling masses that protection without which discontentment, inconvenience, and suffering could not be avoided. And I submit, Mr. Speaker, that discontented labor is a grievous thing.

But while protection in this country affords the means whereby the laborer receives a sufficient wage for his hire, there has never been inaugurated, on the part of the Government, an earnest effort to provide for him ample and safe protection for the small surplus earnings, a judicious investment of which would assure him in his declining years the means with which to procure comfort and happiness.

The men who toil in the field, in the mine, and in the factory are entitled to every blessing and comfort wise legislation can afford them. Without the hand of toil, Mr. Speaker, prosperity would end and no enterprise of national importance could be continued.

Wild-cat savings banks and other get-rich-quick concerns do not afford the necessary protection. Men of sense refuse to deposit their earnings in such institutions. Better spend it and have a good time, they argue, than turn it over to some frenzied financier to be used, perhaps, in a frantic effort to stay prosecution for illegal speculations, which are bound sooner or later to land him in the penitentiary.

Mr. Speaker, in all progressive nations, save only our own, sincere effort is made by the people's representatives to encourage the poor to save some part of their small earnings by securing them absolutely against loss. These nations not only secure them against loss, but pay them interest on their deposits.

In Germany savings banks are governed by separate States, but I am informed that the system is practically uniform. The banks, which are directed by officers appointed by the administrative authorities, are maintained by the city, town, or parish in which they are located, and the district authorities are answerable to the depositors.

Aside from Germany, all other progressive foreign nations have adopted the savings-bank system, the system which I respectfully commend to the favorable consideration of this Congress and which has proved to be the most successful and beneficent.

Over a century ago, Mr. Speaker, leading men in Europe began to express a wish to help the poor to save something out of their earnings. Sporadic attempts to put the wish into effect were made, but with little success.

A clergyman named Smith, a name which has almost become extinct in the United States save here in the House of Representatives, was the first person of whom we have any knowledge who, together with two other trustees, agreed to receive from the poor people deposits as low as twopence. These kind-hearted gentlemen promised these small depositors that if they would allow their money to remain undisturbed for one year one-third the sum would be added.

I want to stop here just long enough to remark, Mr. Speaker, that if this land of the free and the home of the Smiths could not produce ten million financiers of that name who are better equipped intellectually to run a bank than was that good preacher, I will change my name to that of Smith. It was a spirit of benevolence, however, that prompted the English theologian. He was not a business man.

In the year 1804, a Mrs. Priscilla Wakefield organized a club known as the Tottenham Association, for the reception and care of small earnings, which association flourished under different methods of operation until 1866.

So, while the postal savings banks system is a modern idea, credit for the first attempts to provide means for the collection and investment of the earnings of the poor is due to the benevolent persons I have named.

Following the enactment by Great Britain of the postal savings bank bill in 1861, other nations being attracted by the success of the system adopted it in the following order:

Country.	Established.	Interest.	Number of depositors.	Deposits.	Average deposit.
		Per cent.

Mr. Speaker, it is not alone the industrial classes and the wage-earners who desire the adoption by the Government of this most salutary system. I believe that if the facts were laid before the people at least 90 per cent of them would favor it. Do those gentlemen who oppose governmental control of savings banks understand that upward of 50,000,000 of people in the United States are without any well-regulated savings bank system? Think of it, gentlemen, 50,000,000 people denied the privilege of a protected banking system. And yet we boast of advanced American idea, advanced American statesmanship, and superior American everything else. And I am strongly inclined to the belief that we are superior to every other nation in all wise and beneficent enterprises save only in this one particular, and it is with a wish that we may be in the front in all things that I am advocating the adoption of the postal savings depositories, through the aid of which so much good can be accomplished by way of engendering a spirit of thrift in a large class of our people who do not now receive any especial inducements to put aside for old age some portion of their earnings which are, thanks to the good laws heretofore placed upon our statute books, more than sufficient for the actual needs of life.

The adoption by this Government of a postal savings bank system has been strenuously advocated by some of our foremost public men for years. As early as 1871 Postmaster-General Cresswell, in recommending the establishment of postal telegraph and post-office savings banks, had this to say in his annual report for the year:

The Post-Office Department is now prepared to undertake the organization and management of the telegraph in connection with its other duties. Indeed I believe that the Department itself can aid materially in raising the money needed for the purchase through post-office savings banks, if Congress will authorize their establishment. The security of the Government being the best that could be obtained, many depositors would give it the preference over every other. By paying 4 per cent interest at the most on deposits a large fund could be readily accumulated and invested, under the direction of the Treasury Department, in the public securities. The proceeds of these investments could be used to reimburse the original purchase money and all other expenditures for construction and repairs.

To prove the feasibility of this plan, I recur to the history of the British office. Savings banks in connection with post-offices were established in Great Britain on the 10th of September, 1861, with a limitation in the law creating them that they should not pay exceeding 2½ per cent interest on deposits. The following table will show with what rapidity and to what extent they have been intrusted with the money of the people:

Period.	Number of post-office savings banks.	Number of deposits.	Amount of deposits.	Total sum standing to credit of post-office savings banks on books of national-debt commissioners at close of the year.	Balance in hands of post-master-general after allowing for charges of management at close of the year.	Total balance in hand applicable to payment of depositors at close of the year.
From Sept. 16, 1861, to Dec. 31, 1862.....	2,535	639,216	$2,114,069	$1,659,032	$35,692	$1,694,724
1863.....	2,991	842,848	2,651,200	3,328,182	44,413	3,372,595
1864.....	3,081	1,110,762	3,350,000	4,905,063	5,522	5,001,185
1865.....	3,321	1,302,300	3,719,017	6,582,329	4,327	6,586,656
1866.....	3,507	1,525,871	4,400,057	8,231,176	25,791	8,256,967
1867.....	3,629	1,592,344	4,643,906	9,867,703	47,690	9,915,393
1868.....	3,813	1,757,303	5,333,638	11,963,053	Nil.	11,899,400
1869.....	4,047	1,908,644	5,787,218	13,755,547	19,386	13,774,933
1870.....	4,082	2,135,993	5,905,121	15,305,040	158,888	15,463,928

The total amount in hand after ten years' operations, and for which the British Government pays only 2½ per cent interest, is $15,463,928, or $75,145,690—a much larger sum than will be required for the purchase and thorough repair of all the telegraphic lines in the United States.

In 1872 the same official, in renewing his recommendation for the establishment of postal savings banks, said:

Post-office savings banks have been in operation in the United Kingdom since the 10th of September, 1861, and have steadily grown in popular confidence and favor. During the year 1871 the number of depositors increased 120,000 and the amount of deposits nearly £2,000,000. The total number of depositors is now 2,362,621, and the total sum standing to the credit of the post-office £17,303,815, or about $84,000,000. These figures show conclusively the utility of postal savings banks, and I renew my recommendation of last year for their establishment in this country.

Again, in 1873, Mr. Cresswell, in language forceful and convincing, urged the adoption of this system, but as his argument was somewhat lengthy I will not incorporate it in my remarks.

In 1880 Postmaster-General Maynard, in indorsing his predecessor, had this to say:

One of my predecessors some years since recommended the incorporation into the Department of a system of postal savings. The subject has from time to time occupied the attention of Congress. For several years the system has been in operation in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and in Canada. When in London recently, Her Majesty's postmaster-general kindly gave me facilities for observing the management of his department. I learned that the postal savings system had been remarkably successful and had constantly grown in popular favor. As managed in that country, it is a source of some profit to the Government.

In this country I incline to the belief that the system would have advantages even greater than in a compact population like that of Great Britain.

Wealth, public and private, consists largely of the savings of production over consumption, small in detail, but enormous in the aggregate. In by far the larger portion of the United States there are no savings depositories, and are not likely to be. To the people of these parts the use of the post-office for this purpose would be a real boon. It would be an additional advantage that deposits would be available at any depository office in the United States, an important consideration with a people so migratory as ours. It is believed the system would interfere little with the business of the savings banks, but would absorb funds not now deposited in them. Nor would the patronage of the Government be sensibly increased, since the system would be operated by persons already in the public service, with no considerable addition to the number. Your attention and the attention of Congress is respectfully invited to it.

In 1881 Postmaster-General James said:

As early as 1871 a recommendation was made by one of my predecessors for the establishment of a system of savings depositories in connection with this Department, and in several subsequent annual reports this recommendation has been renewed.

December 18, 1873, "A bill to establish and maintain a national savings depository as a branch of the Post-Office Department" was introduced in the House of Representatives by Hon. Horace Maynard, of Tennessee. From time to time since that date the measure has occupied the attention of Congress, and many bills have been introduced, but without securing definite action.

A system of post-office savings banks went into operation in Great Britain September 16, 1861. At the close of its first complete year the number of open accounts was 178,495, and the amount standing to the credit of depositors was £1,698,221, being an average of £9 10s. 3d. to each account. Since that time the institution has grown rapidly in popular favor, and on the 31st of December, 1870, the number of outstanding accounts had risen to 1,988,477, and the amount of the credit of depositors to £32,012,134, an average of £16 1s. 11½d. to each. The interest paid to depositors is only 2½ per cent, a rate so low as practically to exclude the post-office savings banks from competition with other banking institutions, as the history of the rise and progress of savings institutions in Great Britain has demonstrated, the object of the Government being to offer to the depositor security rather than profitable investment for his earnings, and to promote frugality, steady habits, and consequent thrift among the laboring classes.

My predecessor, in his last annual report, said that in the larger portion of the United States there are no savings depositories, and are not likely to be; and he expressed the opinion that, to the people of these parts, the use of the post-office for this purpose would be a real boon. That it would be an advantage to the patrons of the institution, that deposits would be available at any depository post-office in the country, "an important consideration with a people so migratory as ours." He further expressed the belief that the system would interfere little with the business of the savings banks, but would rather absorb funds not now deposited in them. He thought that the patronage of the Government would not be sensibly increased, since the system would be conducted by persons already in the public service, with no considerable addition to their number.

In these views I concur. It is my earnest conviction that a system of this description, if adopted, would insure more than almost any other measure of public importance to the benefit of the working people of the United States, and I commend it to the favorable consideration of Congress.

Postmaster-General Howe repeated the recommendation in 1882, as did Postmaster-General Wanamaker in 1889, 1890, 1891, and 1892, and in 1897 Postmaster-General Gary, who had given exhaustive and most careful consideration to the subject, submitted in his report unanswerable reasons why this beneficent system should be established. Had I the time at my command I would have these several reports read from the Clerk's desk, as I regard them as most convincing and exhaustive. They should be studied by everyone who wishes to enter into the matter fully.

Postmaster-General Meyer, in his annual report dated November 30, 1907, made the following recommendation relative to the establishment of postal savings banks throughout the United States:

I earnestly recommend the establishment of postal savings banks:

First. In order to encourage among our people economy and thrift.

Second. In order to afford a place of deposit free from any possibility of doubt or suspicion for vast sums of money which might otherwise be hoarded and kept out of circulation through ignorance or lack of confidence.

Wherever it may be, this money has lost its proper functions and the business of the nation not only receives no benefit from it, but even the prosperity of the country suffers and may be eventually destroyed. Money deposited in postal savings banks would be absolutely safe, as the Government would be back of it.

More than seven millions of immigrants landed in this country during the past ten years, and it has been demonstrated that in the aggregate immense sums of money have been hoarded or sent away by these people. In many instances it has been found that, for want of postal savings banks, money orders are being bought, payable to the purchaser, good for one year.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, the Post-Office Department sent to European countries alone in the form of money orders $72,111,748.94. Of this sum, $18,986,519.61 went to Italy (representing 459,795 money orders, averaging $41.29 each); $16,363,991.66 to Austria-Hungary; $11,582,028.54 to Great Britain, and $7,250,853.69 to Russia. This money, while it was accumulating, would naturally have been placed for safety in the postal savings banks. In fact, it has been brought to my attention that money of the immigrants, on account of its possessors being ignorant of our language and suspicious of our private institutions, is being sent home in order that it may be placed in the postal savings banks of their native countries. It is believed that this would not be the case, in many instances, if we had postal savings banks in the United States.

The total amount of deposits in the savings banks of this country is $3,690,078,945. Of this amount, $1,394,296,034 is in the State of New York; $1,229,701,214 is in the New England States, $694,081,142 being deposited in the State of Massachusetts; $282,508,956 is in the State of California; $159,174,012 is in the State of Pennsylvania; $194,668,858 is in the State of Illinois; $135,370,436 is in the State of Iowa, and but $294,359,435 in the rest of the United States.

From these figures it will be seen that 38 per cent is in New York State; 33 per cent is in the New England States, about 10 per cent being in Massachusetts; 7.66 per cent in California, 4 per cent in Pennsylvania, 5 per cent in Illinois, nearly 4 per cent in Iowa, and only about 7.98 per cent in all the remaining States.

It has been computed that in the New England States the post-office averages only about 15 miles from the savings bank, the distance in the Middle States averages 25 miles, in the Southern States 33 miles, and in the States west of the Rockies 55 miles. It is believed that postal savings banks would be a great accommodation and an incentive to the great mass of people who have not the proper facilities near their homes for placing their savings in safe-keeping.

From a study of the system which is working so satisfactorily in Canada it is believed that practically no additional clerk hire is required in the various post-offices, the entries being made by the money-order clerk. That the postal savings bank business can be handled with safety is best attested by the results in Canada, where in thirty-nine years $465,000,000 have been received and disbursed, with a loss to the government of not more than $25,000. The total deposits in postal savings banks there at present aggregate $50,000,000.

It is recommended that the Postmaster-General be given authority to designate all money-order post-offices, and such other post-offices as may be deemed necessary, to receive deposits of money for savings; deposits to be accepted in even dollars, with $1 as a minimum; postmasters to be required to receipt for such deposits in the pass books of the depositors and to make daily reports thereof to the Postmaster-General, who will acknowledge receipt of the deposits direct to the patrons; money deposited in the postal savings banks not to be liable to demand, seizure, or detention under legal processes against the depositor. Withdrawals may be made at any time, subject to certain regulations.

On deposits made in postal savings banks a rate of interest of 2 per cent per annum is suggested, the deposits to be limited to $500 by any one person; any individual in the United States 10 years old or more to be permitted to open an account in his own name and deposit to his credit an amount not in excess of $500. A child under 10 years of age to have an account opened in his name by a parent or guardian, but withdrawals are not to be made until the child attains the age of 10.

That the money deposited in the postal savings banks may return to the channels of trade, authority is asked to place it in the national banks which are Government depositories in the States where the money is deposited in the post-offices. In consultation with a number of presidents of national banks in various parts of the country I have been assured that on special deposits of this character from the Post-Office Department they would allow a rate of interest of 2½ per cent. As the Post-Office Department (Government) is a preferred creditor, it would not demand collateral from the banks in the way of bonds. There would be the safeguard of having the Comptroller of the Currency report regularly on the standing of the banks that are used as depositories, and the double liability of the stockholders of the national banks would be an additional assurance of the security of the deposits. Thus the principal object of the savings banks would be to encourage habits of economy, not only among our own men and women, as well as children of 10 years of age or over, who live in places remote from any bank, but also to encourage the foreign settler to deposit his earnings in this country, because after he had accumulated a few hundred dollars he would not be content to receive merely 2 per cent interest, but would possibly seek to purchase a home, and the moment he acquired real property here he would become a more conservative citizen, would be actively interested in the affairs of the nation, and, at the same time, would place himself and his dependents beyond the likelihood of becoming public charges. Should, however, his earnings remain in the postal savings banks the fact that he had an interest in the Government and something at stake would tend to make him a more desirable citizen.

President Roosevelt, desirous of securing legislation which he deemed of the greatest importance to the working people and the business interests of the country, said in his annual message to Congress on the first Monday of December, 1907:

POSTAL AFFAIRS.

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress a postal savings bank system, as recommended by the Postmaster-General. The primary object is to encourage among our people economy and thrift, and by the use of postal savings banks to give them an opportunity to husband their resources, particularly those who have not the facilities at hand for depositing their money in savings banks. Viewed, however, from the experience of the past few weeks, it is evident that the advantages of such an institution are still more far-reaching. Timid depositors have withdrawn their savings for the time being from national banks, trust companies, and savings banks; individuals have hoarded their cash and the workmen their earnings; all of which money has been withheld and kept in hiding or in the safe-deposit box, to the detriment of prosperity. Through the agency of the postal savings banks such money would be restored to the channels of trade, to the mutual benefit of capital and labor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, believing, as I do, that the recommendations of the President and Postmasters-General are sound and logical, it is difficult for me to understand why no action has been taken by Congress to adopt this scheme by providing by law for its application. It can not truthfully be said that the system if adopted will be unproductive of good results, for the benefits derived in every country where it exists have been great and lasting. Thrift, intelligent and earnest, has superseded ignorant waste. The people are rapidly becoming self-supporting. Loyalty and patriotism have been stimulated and the nations adopting it have in no way become embarrassed or impaired.

No one can deny that patriotism and thrift will be increased by a governmental assurance of protection of the earnings of the poor. No one will deny the fact that by the adoption of this system millions of people in those sections of our country where no safe banking facilities are afforded will be benefited almost beyond measure. No one can deny that it will put into circulation millions upon millions of money now secreted between walls, under carpets, in stockings and belts, and in innumerable other unsafe hiding places. No one will contend that the depositors in these banks will be less interested in the welfare and prosperity of their Government than they now are. On the contrary, everybody must admit that the depositors will immediately become more directly interested in the success of every honorable undertaking by their Government, in the welfare of which they are now so deeply concerned.

Mr. Speaker, this is no charity scheme, but a safe, sure, and sound business proposition. It is safe and sound because it has withstood, uninjured, panics and financial crises which have ruined many banks not enjoying the confidence of depositors which Government protection alone can give to such institutions. It is a business proposition, because it will afford a reserve which can be relied upon in times of financial disaster.

The establishment of these banks by England has been extensively followed. I hold in my hand a tabular statement which I have taken from the journal of the Canadian Bankers' Association, published in 1897, and which gives the date of institution in each country and shows the amount of business done. This table does not, I am sorry to say, show business done by the postal savings banks of Russia, Japan, or the Hawaiian Islands, where banks of this character were then in operation. The table is as follows:

Post-office savings banks during year 1892.

By a glance at these tables anyone can see that postal savings banks are wise, beneficent, and profitable institutions. They not only inculcate ideas of thrift and economy among the poorer classes, but yield to the governments adopting them handsome profits. Their only aggressive opponents are found among private banks that are similarly engaged. Very few newspapers oppose their adoption, and wage-earners, men engaged in agricultural pursuits, and 95 per cent of all other classes of citizens earnestly favor them. Even bank associations in our larger cities interpose no objection to these governmental depositories. They look upon them as a means through which ordinary banking may be made to yield greater profit.

Bank presidents know that in no way could they secure for their individual banks the aggregate sum of such small deposits as would be drawn from their immediate localities by the postal savings banks system. They do not enjoy any appreciable part of it now, notwithstanding the high rate of interest they offer. They know, however, that the country at large would receive the benefit of the circulation of such deposits if they could be attracted to and disbursed from some central depository, and that the benefits ordinary banks would derive from such a vast circulation of money would increase their business far beyond the present limits. They know that these depositories would aid rather than hinder their business, because the low rate of interest paid by the Government would render them unable to compete for business such as savings banks proper now enjoy. This for years has been the experience of countries where postal savings banks are in operation.

For the information of those persons who contend, however, that the adoption by the Government of these banks would necessarily interfere with banks of a private nature, I want to inform them that the business of private banks in foreign countries has steadily increased, and that the deposits in those banks have multiplied wondrously since their adoption.

The postal savings banks and the private savings banks do not serve or benefit the same class of customers. Private banks depend largely upon depositors of considerable means, while postal savings banks number their depositors among the poorer classes, such as clerks, miners, laborers, and so forth.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that deposits in foreign savings depositories are exceedingly small. In 1895, in Austria, 30 per cent were for 20 cents, 23 per cent between 20 cents and $1; in Canada, 37 per cent were below $10, and in the Netherlands 43 per cent were less than $4.

In most cases the accounts are comparatively small. In Belgium 60 per cent are less than $20; in France, 36 per cent $4; in Victoria, 45 per cent $5.

It is also a most interesting and significant fact that a very large per cent of these depositors are minor children. In Austria, in 1895, 54 per cent of the depositors were under 20 years of age.

Are the above figures calculated to frighten men engaged in private banking enterprises? I undertake to say that not 5 per cent of all the money deposited in postal savings banks would ever have been placed for safe-keeping in private banking institutions. Such institutions could not have supplied the means for its collection. Even our great national banks, aided as they are by the Government, have not been able to supply the conveniences made necessary by the growth of our country, while the smallest hamlet in countries where this system has been adopted is afforded the same facilities depositors in large cities enjoy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if by proper legislation some means could be secured whereby savings depositories could be established for the people of the country who do not now enjoy adequate means for the deposit and safe-keeping of their earnings. I believe a spirit of patriotism would be engendered such as nothing short of an attack by a foreign enemy upon our flag could produce. Not only would patriotism be engendered, but the vast sums of money which would surely flow into Government depositories would insure the nation against panics, hard times, and financial crises.

I have no patience with those easily excited financiers who contend that suitable investments could not be found for such a vast amount of money. Splendid investments, which would for years afford ample security, present themselves on every hand. The public debt; Government bonds, a sale of which has been made necessary on account of the building of the Panama Canal; municipal bonds and State bonds are some investments which, when approved by the Government, are available, safe, and sound.

Since money is being procured by the issuance of bonds for the completion of the canal, why not let the people purchase the bonds? They need the interest money much more than it is needed in Wall street.

Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 311) introduced by myself, and which is now before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, will, I believe, if enacted into law, provide the means necessary for putting this commendable scheme into operation, and I most respectfully recommend it to the favorable consideration of the House. It is as follows:

A bill to establish a postal savings bank system and to provide for the conduct and regulation of the same. Introduced by Mr. MADSEN and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

IN CONTROL OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to make the Post-Office Department available for the protection of small savings, with the pledge of the National Government for the due repayment of the same, there is hereby established a postal savings bank system, with a central bank and branch banks, under the direction and supervision of the Postmaster-General. There shall be established at the seat of Government, as a branch of the Post-Office Department, a chief office, to be known as the "central bank." And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to designate such money-order post-offices as he may select for that purpose as branch postal savings banks, to receive small deposits and repay the same, subject to regulations made by him in conformity with the provisions of this act. The system provided for in this act shall be known as the "postal savings bank system," and the moneys received by, transferred to, or in any way appertaining to said bank as "postal savings funds," which moneys shall be deemed and taken to be public moneys, and moneys in the Treasury of the United States.

DEPOSITORS AND LIMIT OF DEPOSITS.

SEC. 2. That any person may become a depositor under this act. Married women may make deposits, and control the same as if they were male adults. Holders of trust funds may deposit the same as trustees. No deposit for a less amount than $1 shall be received, and all deposits of more than $1 shall be in multiples of $1. The deposits of any one individual, provided for in this act, shall not exceed $300 in any one year, and when the amount of deposits standing to the credit of a depositor shall exceed $1,000, no interest shall accrue on the sum in excess of said $1,000.

RECORD OF DEPOSITS.

SEC. 3. That every deposit received by any postmaster designated for that purpose shall be entered by him at the time in the depositor's book, and the entry shall be attested by the postmaster and by the dated stamp of his office; and the amount of such deposit shall, upon the day of such receipt, be reported by such postmaster to the Postmaster-General, and the acknowledgment of the Postmaster-General signified by the officer whom he shall designate for that purpose shall be forthwith transmitted to the depositor, and it shall be the duty of every depositor to see that he receives such acknowledgment. If he does not receive the acknowledgment within twenty days of the time of making his deposit with the postmaster, it shall be the duty of the depositor to notify the Postmaster-General of such fact and to demand from the Postmaster-General the acknowledgment due him.

POSTAL SAVINGS STAMPS.

SEC. 4. That the Postmaster-General shall furnish and keep for sale at branch postal savings bank offices adhesive savings stamps of the denominations of 5 cents and 10 cents, to be known as "postal savings stamps," and shall also furnish for the use of purchasers of such stamps cards upon which stamps when sold shall be affixed, said cards to be known as "postal savings cards." Postal savings cards with stamps affixed to the amount of $1 shall be received by postmasters as deposits of $1. The Postmaster-General shall provide, by regulation, for the redemption and cancellation of postal savings stamps of $1 or less in amount when properly affixed to postal savings cards. In no case shall ordinary postage stamps be used as postal savings stamps.

REPAYMENT OF DEPOSITS.

SEC. 5. That on demand of a depositor or person legally authorized to claim on account of a depositor, made in such form as prescribed for repayment of deposits or any part thereof, the authority of the Postmaster-General for such repayment shall be transmitted to the depositor forthwith; and the depositor shall be absolutely entitled to receive such sum with the least possible delay after making demand at the post-office.

INTEREST ON DEPOSITS.

SEC. 6. That interest shall be paid on deposits at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, which said interest shall begin the first day of the calendar month following the date of deposit, and shall cease on the last day of the calendar month preceding the date of withdrawal. Interest accrued shall be added to principal on the 30th day of June of each year. No interest shall be computed on any fractional part of a dollar standing to the credit of a depositor.

EXAMINATION OF PASS BOOKS.

SEC. 7. That every depositor shall forward his pass book to the Postmaster-General in an envelope which will be furnished him at the post-office for that purpose, once in each year, namely, on the anniversary of the day on which his first deposit was made, for examination and for entry of interest standing to his credit.

DEPOSIT OF FUNDS.

SEC. 8. That the Postmaster-General shall cause to be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, or with an assistant treasurer of the United States, or with a national bank designated as a depository of public moneys under the provisions of section 5153, Revised Statutes, or with such post-offices of the first and second classes as he may have designated as depositories of postal savings funds to the credit of said Treasurer, all postal savings funds, except money necessarily held in reserve to pay withdrawals and to meet the current expenses of the business; and the said Treasurer shall cause an account to be opened with the Postmaster-General to be called the "Postal savings bank account," upon which shall be credited all funds received from or on account of said bank; and sums transferred to postmasters by draft of the Postmaster-General upon said Treasurer, to meet the withdrawal demands of depositors or the current expenses of the business, shall be charged to said account; and at the close of each calendar month the Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit to the Postmaster-General a summary of said account for such month and of all transactions by his Department under the operation of this act.

INVESTMENT OF FUNDS.

SEC. 9. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest in interest-bearing bonds of the United States, or in bonds the principal and interest of which is guaranteed by the United States, funds arising from the operation of this act in excess of what shall be deemed by the Postmaster-General necessary to keep on hand as reserve for redemption purposes and for expenses of administering this act. Whenever it may be found impracticable to secure United States bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, invest such funds in State bonds and in the bonds of municipalities and counties in the United States, subject to the restrictions hereinafter provided:

STATE GUARANTEE OF BONDS.

First. The Secretary of the Treasury may invest such funds in State bonds and in the bonds of municipalities and counties guaranteed by the State in which such municipalities and counties are located. If, for any reason, any State shall fail to make payment of principal or interest on bonds in which postal savings bank funds are invested, or shall fail to make good its guaranty of municipal or county bonds, the Postmaster-General shall refuse to receive deposits at branch postal savings banks within that State, and shall also refuse to pay interest on deposits standing to the credit of depositors at savings bank offices within that State accruing from and after the date he shall have set for refusal to accept any further deposits at branch postal savings banks in said State.

BONDS APPROVED BY A COMMISSION.

Second. Without such State guaranty, the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, invest said funds in the bonds of municipalities having not less than 20,000 inhabitants, according to the last preceding decennial census of the United States, or in the bonds of counties having not less than 40,000 inhabitants, according to the last preceding decennial census: Provided, That the total bonded indebtedness of such municipalities or counties in whose bonds investment is made is not in excess of 5 per cent of the taxable valuation in such municipalities or counties: Provided further, That in all cases of investment in municipal or county bonds, without State guaranty, the bonds in which investment is made shall be approved by a commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Attorney-General as safe and secure investments.

LIMIT OF INVESTMENT.

Third. Provided further, That in no case shall the amount invested in State bonds, and the bonds of municipalities and counties of any State, exceed twice the amount of deposits standing to the credit of depositors in that State.

GUARDING NAMES OF DEPOSITORS.

SEC. 10. That the postmasters and other officers, engaged in the receipt or repayments of deposits, shall not disclose the name of any depositor or the amount of his deposit or withdrawal, except to the Postmaster-General, or to such of his officers as are appointed to assist in carrying into operation the provisions of this act.

NOT LIABLE TO SEIZURE.

SEC. 11. That no sum of money deposited under this act shall, at any time, be liable to demand, seizure, or detention under any legal process against the depositor. Deposits and pass books shall not be transferable. Money deposited under this act shall not be subject to taxation by the United States or by any State.

POSTMASTER'S BOND.

SEC. 12. That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, require an additional bond of any postmaster whose office is designated as a branch postal savings bank office.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE ACT.

SEC. 13. That the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury, respectively, shall designate such officers and subdivisions of their Departments to take charge of business in connection with the postal savings bank as may be necessary. If the business of the postal savings bank shall require it, the Postmaster-General may appoint, subject to provisions of existing law, a "general superintendent of the postal savings bank," whose compensation shall be the same as that of the superintendent of the money-order system; and whenever the business of said bank may require their services, he may appoint any additional assistance necessary. Likewise the Secretary of the Treasury may, when in his opinion necessary for the keeping and settling of accounts of the postal savings bank, appoint in the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department the requisite clerks, and to provide for the compensation of said superintendent, clerks, etc., for the fiscal year, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money not otherwise appropriated. The Postmaster-General may provide for such clerical service in branch postal savings banks at post-offices of the first and second classes as may be necessary, in accordance with the provisions of existing laws applicable to the money-order system. At post-offices of the third and fourth classes, the compensation for work in connection with the savings-bank service may be such as the Postmaster-General shall, by general regulation, determine. The Postmaster-General shall cause to be paid out of the proceeds of the postal savings bank business the expenses of administration, including the cost of books, blanks, stationery, stamps, and printing. The provisions of the act regarding blanks, blank books, and printed matter of the money-order service shall apply in carrying out the provisions of this act. For the preliminary expense of putting this act into operation and for meeting any deficit that may arise during the first year, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

MAKING RULES AND REGULATIONS.

SEC. 14. That the Postmaster-General shall make the necessary rules and regulations for carrying into effect this act, including regulations regarding deposits by children under the age of 12 years and by trustees, and the final disposition of deposits of deceased persons, and such regulations shall be binding on all persons to the same extent as if they formed a part of this act; and the Postmaster-General may, from time to time, as may be found necessary to secure the best administration of this act, change such regulations; and the Postmaster-General shall transmit to Congress on the first day of each session a copy of all regulations made and in force and of all changes made subsequent to his last report, and the reason for such changes.

MONTHLY AND ANNUAL REPORTS.

SEC. 15. That the Postmaster-General shall, as soon as practicable after the close of each month, make a report of all moneys received and paid during such month and the total amount of deposits at the end of such month, and such report shall be given publicity as soon after the close of the month as is practicable. The Postmaster-General shall make an annual report showing the amount of deposits received, the amount repaid to depositors, and the total amount due depositors for each year ending June 30; also of all expenses incurred and such other particulars and recommendations as he shall deem necessary. Such annual report shall be transmitted to Congress upon the first day of each regular session.

PUNISHMENT FOR CRIMES AND MISDEMEANORS.

SEC. 16. That all statutes and parts of statutes now in existence of which may hereafter be enacted, defining crimes and misdemeanors in the postal service, whether as burglary, larceny, embezzlement, forgery, counterfeiting, or misappropriation of funds, postal, money order, or otherwise, and providing punishment therefor, be, and the same are hereby, extended and in all respects made applicable to the commission of and punishment therefor of all such crimes and misdemeanors in connection with the postal savings bank system or in connection with postal savings funds or any funds that may arise or be received under the provisions of this act.

PUTTING ACT INTO EFFECT.

SEC. 17. This act shall take effect and the system herein provided for shall go into operation at such time, within six months after its passage, as the Postmaster-General shall designate.

Mr. VREELAND. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKINNEY].

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, when this Congress convened in December there was no subject being so seriously considered by the American people as that of currency legislation. From all over the country came the demand for remedial legislation that would prevent the recurrence of the troubles which beset us last fall. The cry was not from the bankers alone, but from the manufacturers, the merchants, the farmers, and the men whose ability to labor with their hands is their only capital. All were affected by the financial depression, and all were eager for relief and desirous that it should come as soon as possible.

The demand made of Congress was for action—for action now, at this session, and not, as has been argued by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER], that it would be time enough to consider the subject at the coming session, through the operation of a commission, as there was no impending danger threatening the country. I have always admired the temerity, but not the judgment, of the weather prognosticators who predict twelve months ahead just what weather conditions will be each day during the coming year.

The people demand action now, that we may not be subjected during the coming autumn to other troubles which legislation enacted at this session would prevent. I feel that I am warranted in saying that I have received more letters from my constituents and others throughout the country relating to the subject of currency legislation than upon any other during this session. The letters earnestly advocated immediate action by Congress and set forth the needs of such prompt consideration. To each of these communications I have replied that I agreed with the writer as to the importance of present action and that, so far as I was able, I would assist in bringing it about. I meant what I said when I wrote those letters, and I favor the enactment of a currency bill at this session, provided it promises to be remedial.

President Roosevelt fully appreciates the necessity for immediate action and emphasized the need by referring to the subject in several of his messages to Congress during the months we have been in session. In his message at the beginning of the session he used the following words, referring in his first sentence to his message of the previous year:

I again urge on the Congress the need of immediate attention to this matter. We need a greater elasticity in our currency, provided, of course, that we recognize the even greater need of a safe and secure currency. There must always be the most rigid examination by the national authorities. Provision should be made for an emergency currency. The emergency issue should, of course, be made with an effective guaranty and upon conditions carefully prescribed by the Government. Such emergency issue must be based on adequate securities approved by the Government, and must be issued under a heavy tax. This would permit currency being issued when the demand for it was urgent, while securing its retirement as the demand fell off.

In his special message of March 25 the President says:

The question of financial legislation is now receiving such attention in both Houses that we have a right to expect action before the close of the session. It is urgently necessary that there should be such action.

Again, in the special message of April 27 the President uses these words:

Apparently there is good ground to hope that financial legislation will be enacted providing for temporary measures for meeting any trouble that may arise in the next year or two, and for a commission of experts who shall thoroughly investigate the whole matter, both here and in the great commercial countries abroad, so as to be able to recommend legislation which will put our financial system on an efficient and permanent basis.

So the people had a right to expect that a Republican Congress would enact legislation upon this very important subject along the lines of their demand.

As a member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, I wish to corroborate what has just been stated by the gentleman from New Jersey, the chairman of the committee [Mr. FOWLER]. He said:

No committee in this House has worked harder during this session to secure a currency measure.

In view of the barrenness of results, he should have added, "Nor argued more extensively nor talked longer than our committee, but we have accomplished nothing."

Now, then, under such circumstances, I do not feel insulted as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee when, under the rule just adopted by this House and for which I voted, this bill is taken out of the hands of our committee and will now receive attention and consideration from the Members of the House which it could not otherwise have secured.

I am for the Vreeland bill; not that it is a perfect bill, not that it can not be improved upon, and perhaps will be improved upon at a coming session, but because I believe it will afford relief during the time that will intervene between the end of this session and the beginning of the next one.

The present abundance of money offers no excuse for failure to provide for a possible emergency. While there are no signs of trouble ahead, a cloud sometimes appears in a clear sky, and it is a wise man who prepares in advance for the day of trial. The New York banks now hold about $64,000,000 in surplus reserve. The great volume of money now congested there may, and probably will, be dispersed as rapidly as it was accumulated, when crop-moving time arrives, and then may come great need of the help this measure would afford.

In taking up the subject of currency legislation we were assured of two things, namely, Democratic opposition and failure to please all Republicans in every clause of the bill. The history of all legislation is a record of compromises and concessions, and if we were to remain in session until the wish of every Republican was fully complied with, Gabriel's trumpet would find us still at an uncompleted task.

As you all know, I introduced a currency bill at the beginning of this session which was largely approved by the business interests of the country, and that would, in my opinion, if adopted, have safeguarded alike the interests of the banker, the business man, and the wage-earner. Other measures of more or less merit have been introduced and all have had their supporters. But when the Republican Members of the House, in conference assembled, by a large majority indorsed the plan set forth in the Vreeland bill, I have felt justified in supporting it myself, because it is the only feasible and workable measure that now has a show of adoption at this session.

The provisions of the Vreeland bill as regards the safety of the bank notes issued under it are, as a leading business man recently told me, "ridiculously strong." There is absolutely no possibility of loss on any of its issues.

It is essentially an emergency measure, and will only be called into operation in case of need. Ordinarily, national-bank notes secured by Government bonds, as they may be expanded and contracted to a limited degree, will be relied upon for our currency supply. Such notes have carried us safely for forty-five years without the loss of a dollar on any note issued. The emergency currency now being provided for will afford a supplemental assistance which, in times of crises or currency shortage, may safely be relied upon for additional relief.

As a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, so a law must be carefully scrutinized to see that all its parts measure up to the standard that is expected of it. So the Vreeland bill must be studied. And, in my opinion, the more the bill is studied the better will be the impression gained of it.

It is not my purpose to go into an exhaustive review of the measure. Currency legislation has been so long before this Congress, and there has been so much debate upon it, that every Member is well informed upon the subject. However, you will pardon me if I call particular attention to some of the more important features.

During the flurry last fall the clearing-house plan for an emergency currency was put into operation in most of the financial and manufacturing centers of the country. How well the plan worked in actual practice is shown by the success that was had in meeting the sudden crisis that came upon us. Not a dollar of the clearing-house money issued in any city was repudiated, and when the crisis was passed it was quickly withdrawn from circulation.

The Vreeland bill legalizes what is called "national clearing houses," and defines the scope of their operation. The associations provided for in the Vreeland bill are under governmental supervision, and are hedged about with regulations that add to their strength and to uniformity of action. Behind every dollar that may be issued will be solid, substantial security, and in addition thereto, a reserve against notes in circulation and the joint and several guaranty of every bank in the proposed clearing-house association.

Not less than ten banks, all in contiguous territory, with an aggregate capital and surplus of not less than $5,000,000 can form such an association. The association being formed, any bank belonging to it can at any time secure additional circulation by depositing with the clearing-house association securities, including commercial paper that may be approved by the association, upon which national-bank notes to an amount not exceeding 75 per cent of the face value of such securities may be issued. Before the bank can take out this additional circulation it must have circulating notes outstanding, secured by the deposit of Government bonds, to an amount not less than 40 per cent of its capital stock, and must have its capital and a surplus of not less than 20 per cent unimpaired. Not more than the amount of the unimpaired capital and surplus of any bank can be taken out in notes, and this includes the Government bond-secured issue.

Each and every bank in an association is liable in all its assets to the United States for every dollar of the emergency currency issued by its clearing-house association.

Again, the bill provides that all the States shall have their proportionate share of the $500,000,000 which is made the limit of the issue. This provision does away with any claim that the bill favors one section above another.

A permanent "inflation," so-called, is not possible under this bill, for the high tax on such emergency circulation will insure its retirement at the earliest date possible. The tax on such an issue is 4 per cent for the first two months, and an additional tax of 1 per cent per month is added until 10 per cent is reached, which rate shall continue until the notes are redeemed. With circulation secured at such a cost, no bank will keep its notes outstanding a day longer than the emergency requires.

If there is ever to be any issue of currency in the United States other than that founded on Government bonds, it would be hard to provide a plan that would make such currency safer than under the Vreeland bill. Unusual safeguards have been thrown around the proposed currency at every stage. The Secretary of the Treasury has absolute control of the organization and operation of the clearing-house associations and has discretionary power over the securities accepted for note issues. Only safe and sound banks can have a place in such associations, for the bankers themselves will see to that, as they are all liable to the fullest degree for the notes issued within their association. Then when it comes to the approval of the securities to back up the issue of the notes, they must be gilt-edged securities or promissory notes about which there is not the slightest question, or else they will be dropped from consideration on account of the general liability involved.

The bill also provides for the maintenance of a reserve against note issues of the same general proportions as that now required under the national banking laws to secure deposits. This provision adds great additional protection to note holders. In fact, with the other requirements, it will make the issues under this measure absolutely and permanently good.

In no way can the security of the depositor be disturbed by the issue of such notes on the part of the bank assets, as the currency realized goes to the bank for its protection during the time of stringency.

The Vreeland bill is intended to meet the requirements of the people for a measure that will add elasticity to our currency system in a way that is absolutely safe, and yet that can be put into operation without disturbing the present system and be instantly available should a crisis arise without warning. Its provisions have been carefully studied by Treasury officials and others capable of judging of the merits or demerits of a financial proposition.

Provision is also made for a commission to study the intricate subject of currency. It does not contemplate a commission so large as to be unwieldy, but large enough so that the sentiment of all sections of the country can be reflected by its membership. It provides that the commission shall go to work immediately and be ready with a plan of currency reform by January 1, 1900. This is as it should be, for I believe the commission should begin work at once and in earnest in order to develop a permanent measure that will meet the financial conditions of the country, which have changed and outgrown currency provisions which were adequate when the present system was originally put in force.

The integrity of our currency must be protected. Like Caesar's wife, it must be above suspicion. Under existing laws its value has never been questioned. It must not be doubted in the future. I believe the Vreeland bill insures the safety of every dollar issued under its provisions, and also that it insures the Government from loss in its redemption. It just as surely protects the depositor by keeping the banks open when a crisis comes. The currency provided for is in no sense fiat money any more than are the notes issued under the present system.

While financial difficulties are not likely to recur in the near future, there is no man in this country wise enough to be absolutely certain that currency shortage may not come during the recess of Congress. It is well known that during a national campaign year a feeling of uncertainty and unrest exists in the country. If this bill is passed it will afford adequate relief should an emergency arise. If trouble does not come no harm has been done. I do not believe it will be called upon, but if the country has nothing to look to for relief, that very fact might lead to a continuation of disturbed conditions, which would, at least, tend to retard the return to normal business conditions.

Realizing the need of immediate legislation along the lines urged by the President and the leaders of the House and Senate, and being well satisfied that the measure under discussion is safe, and that it will meet any emergency that may arise, I trust the House will promptly pass it, and thus demonstrate again to the people that the Republican party is the constructive party, and that it may be depended upon, as the party of action, to act speedily in the interests of the people as often as the necessity for so doing may come.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to review impassionately the bill under consideration. But, first, I wish to say I am anxious to pass some sort of financial legislation to give relief to the whole country. I do not want to enact, in the name of currency legislation, a law that will destroy or tend to destroy what business prosperity we now enjoy with its growing and encouraging prospect of a return to general and normal business conditions.

I do not believe in legislation to cure bad and abnormal business conditions brought about by violating honest and safe business rules by the very people who desire the legislation. I prefer legislation to prevent a recurrence of such conditions.

I do believe in providing for all sections of our country some mode of relief from conditions normally liable to come, and to this end, on December 3, 1900, ten months before the October (1907) panic came, I introduced here a bill to authorize credit notes, safely secured by bonds, to be issued by all national banks, to meet such conditions as might arise, and also to provide for the deposit of surplus public moneys with national banks. This bill I introduced here again December 2, 1907. The bill, in principle, had the approval of financiers all over the country, but it was too plain in its provisions and too free from local partiality to receive much support here. If that bill had been passed in the Fifty-ninth Congress, it would have at least averted any financial panic conditions outside of the storm center where the October panic originated.

Long ago [1877] I voted against the repeal of the resumption act which was to go into effect January 1, 1879, when disaster was not only prophesied but threatened on every side to be precipitated, and when we had of all kinds of money circulation only $14.79 per capita, some of which was not worth par. I never regretted that vote, and resumption and prosperity on a gold basis followed. Now, with a per capita of $35.35 of circulating money, we act as though there was a scarcity of money to do business. Honest business methods is what is needed, and not more and partially discredited money, soon to be withdrawn.

I do not pose as a financial expert though I have had a long life of diversified business experience, during thirty-five years of which I have been president of a national bank that passed through all panics, including that of 1873, without suspending or issuing a certificate of credit of any kind or failing to pay promptly in lawful money every check presented at its counter.

I do not on the other hand assume financial wisdom here, as some do, on boasted ignorance of any and all accepted business principles. That sort of assumption is only a common kind of political demagoguery unworthy of us.

I must now ask such of my Republican colleagues as differ from me to excuse me for not at this period of my long life surrendering convictions that reject a currency bill that I regard as bad in all its substantial parts, and which nobody has been able to continue to support overnight.

The bill is entitled, "A bill to amend the national banking laws."

It has no relation to proper banking, but it relates, save the provision relating to a commission, to a method of escaping the necessary penalties of vicious or illegal banking at great money centers.

The first sentence of the first section authorizes "national banks not less than ten in number having an aggregate capital and surplus of at least $5,000,000" to form a "voluntary association to be designated as 'clearing-house associations.'" Save as thus designated there is not one word or provision in the bill indicating that the nondescript associations proposed to be organized are to have any possible element of a clearing house vested in them.

A clearing house is where clearing is carried on, and a banking clearing house is a place where checks, drafts, and so forth, are taken and balances are ascertained and settled between its members. The bill provides nothing of the kind. On the contrary, it pretends to provide for a mode of pledging all the available securities each bank—a member of the association—has and is willing to pledge to get a possible 75 per cent of the cash value thereof in a new currency to be used presumably to pay the 100 cents on a dollar it owes to its depositors whose money bought the securities, and this because the association bank has been so unbusinesslike or criminally reckless in its transactions as to endanger its solvency, or at least to destroy its credit and to lose the confidence of its depositors.

The new corporate association to be thus organized is, by the bill, to become a body corporate, with right to sue and be sued, yet it is at no time to have a dollar of assets in its own right, not even enough to pay its own officers and bookkeepers their salaries and their expenses in traveling to and from corporate meetings necessary to be held. It is to be managed by one representative from each bank a member thereof—not a board of directors of its own—and its powers may be exercised by an executive committee, but no provision is made for its appointment. (Section 1.) What would it sue for, or what could it be sued for unless to compel it to turn over trust assets deposited with it belonging to an associated bank?

The new association having no assets of its own could only be the custodian as trustee (section 2) of its members, either of their securities or currency issued thereon. It would have nothing of its own to be used or taken by process to pay its debts, however or for whatever contracted.

It would be a corporation with officers and representatives of its banks with certain powers, but without capital stock or assets or the hope of any, and therefore without corporate liability or responsibility, though it is to be the custodian of whatever of securities its banks would pass over to them. No officer is even to give bond for the performance of his duties faithfully.

Such associations are required (section 9) to redeem the additional currency, but it has no assets of its own to redeem anything with.

And the association could not, as such, be held liable for any defalcations or embezzlements of its officers or agents. What an association to be relied on to create confidence in the presence of financial disaster!

The fact that such association is to become the custodian of all securities deposited and the recipient of all additional notes issued for any or all of its bank members is equivalent to allowing each bank to hold its own pledged securities or collaterals on which it receives circulation. This is without precedent and utterly dangerous. The officers and board of each such association consist of representatives of the constituent banks, and they are to hold and control the securities. Why not, with equal safety, allow each national bank to hold its own securities? The so-called "clearing-house association" has no assets or financial responsibility. It has none of the real attributes of a corporation. A recovery against it for embezzlement would avail nothing, for nothing represents its assets.

Not more than one such association is to be formed in any city (section 1), and the circulating notes to be issued are to be equitably distributed "on the basis of the proportion which the unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations in a State bears to the total amount of the unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations of the United States," with possible exceptions (section 6).

Only in cases where associations are formed from banks of one or more States are the banks required to be from contiguous territory. An association may be formed from banks located in each of ten cities in the State of New York (or other State), and there is no limitation on the number so to be formed, provided only one "shall be formed in any one city." (Section 2.)

The sole power of the association is "to render available as a basis for additional circulation any securities, including commercial paper, held by a national banking association." But the national bank must, to obtain circulation under the bill, only be a member of the so-called "clearing-house association," and it must have "circulating notes outstanding secured by the deposit of bonds of the United States to an amount of not less than 40 per cent of its capital stock," which must be unimpaired, and a 20 per cent surplus. Thus circumstanced a bank may deposit with its association "in trust" such securities as may be satisfactory to the board of the association, and its officers may then apply to the Comptroller of the Currency for an issue of additional circulating notes not exceeding 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities or commercial paper so deposited. The Secretary of the Treasury may, if satisfied the lien of the United States on the securities and on the assets of the banks composing the association is sufficient and that the "business conditions in the locality demand additional circulation," direct such "an issue of additional circulating notes to the association on behalf of such bank." (Section 2.)

The assets of all banks belonging to the association are to be held jointly and severally liable to the United States for their redemption, and the lien shall extend to and cover the assets of all banks belonging to the association and to the securities so deposited, but as between the several banks composing the association "each bank shall be liable only in the proportion that its capital and surplus bears to the aggregate capital and surplus of all such banks." The association may require the deposit of additional securities, and on a failure to comply on ten days' notice it may sell the securities and paper in its hands at public sale, the fund thus received to be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States for the redemption of the circulating notes, and if it is insufficient for the purpose the association may recover from the bank the amount of the deficiency by suit and subject all its assets to the payment. (Section 3.)

Again, it is provided (section 4) that on failure of any bank belonging to an association to make good its 5 per cent redemption fund, the Treasurer of the United States may make it good from such fund of other banks of the association, and the association may, on five days' notice, sell at public sale the deposited securities and deposit the fund thus arising with such Treasurer for the redemption of the additional circulation.

The "total amount of circulating notes outstanding of any national banking association, including notes secured by United States bonds as now provided by law, and notes secured otherwise than by deposit of such bonds, shall not at any time exceed the amount of its unimpaired capital and surplus." (Section 3.)

The total to be issued is not to exceed $500,000,000.

The bill contains many burdensome provisions relating to national banks. It requires such of them as are located in a reserve city and belong to a so-called "clearing-house association" to keep on hand at all times in gold or lawful money 25 per cent of the additional circulation which it may have taken out, and all others belonging to such an association to keep in like money 15 per cent.

The Government is to print and keep on hand the required notes in blank, in amount equal to 50 per cent of the capital stock of each national banking association in existence, whether or not it belongs to a so-called "clearing-house association." (Section 9.)

The additional circulating notes are to be redeemed on presentation to the Treasury of the United States "in lawful money of the United States." (Section 10.)

The tax on the additional circulation is to be 4 per cent per annum for the first two months, and afterwards an additional tax of 1 per cent per annum for each month until a tax of 10 per cent per annum is reached, and thereafter 10 per cent per annum. (Section 7.)

A "national currency commission" is provided for in the bill, composed of eighteen members, six to be appointed by the President, and six Senators and six Representatives appointed by the Vice-President and Speaker, respectively, to which no special objection seems to be made. (Sections 13-18.)

An appropriation of not exceeding $50,000 is provided for to carry out the purposes of the act. (Section 19.)

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I make the assertion now it is absolutely impossible to enforce that law.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that.

The theory, so far as the bill discloses, is that the additional circulation is to be issued to meet an emergency, but there is nothing in the bill disclosing what the emergency is required to be. Presumably there must be an actual period of financial panic, or at least such a panic impending to warrant the Secretary of the Treasury to determine that "business conditions in the locality demand additional circulation" where the clearing-house association is located. In other words, before such association can start to get authority to put up securities looking to obtaining additional circulation its locality, or at least its banks or the association itself, must be in such bad repute or present such precarious business conditions as to "demand additional circulation."

Insolvency, bankruptcy, inability to pay liabilities, including depositors, a threatened run by depositors on the banks, and so forth, must be imminent or the Secretary of the Treasury can not direct an issue of circulating notes to the association on behalf of any of its banks. The Secretary's order to issue notes to an association would be a flag of distress in the locality where it was located, and be the signal for a panic and a run on all banks in the locality, whether national banks, members of the association, or not, and the panic might spread to the entire country long before the new circulation could be issued and signed. The banks entitled to the new circulation would most likely be closed by a depositors' run upon them before they could receive the new notes.

But what if all the additional circulation that could possibly be issued to an association were issued promptly, what emergency could or would it meet?

Let us take an example far stronger than could ever be found in practice and see how it would work out. We have seen that the amount of additional circulation is to be distributed (section 6) in the proportion the unimpaired national-bank capital and surplus in the State bears to the like capital and surplus of all the national banks of the United States.

Let us assume that New York City would be entitled to one-fifth of all such associations authorized by the bill, and therefore entitled to $100,000,000 of the total $500,000,000 supposed to be issuable. That city, August 22, 1907, as the Comptroller of Currency states, had of loan liability $712,121,059, exclusive of deposit liabilities. The New York City's national-bank liability to depositors exceeded then $1,000,000,000. Some of them had then and have now above $100,000,000 on deposit. These banks only have a little more than one-fourth of the total deposits in New York City banks. I have not the exact figures at hand. They will correspond relatively with others I do have. The total deposits in the Eastern States in 1907 in all banks was $5,597,125,652 and in national banks it was only $1,677,730,813. The grand total of deposits in the United States in national banks at last report was $4,322,880,141, and in all banks $13,099,635,348.

Experience shows that a panic in one business center spreads promptly to the whole country. The recent one in New York City is a fresh example. The emergency is not met merely by aiding a few national banks in a particular locality, nor all national banks of the country. If a real financial-panic emergency comes, it can only be stayed in its calamitous progress by relief to all classes of banks and all classes of business interests.

New York City, with a supposed, but impossible, $100,000,000 of additional emergency circulation, would not have enough to pay off the depositors in one of several of its largest national banks, leaving all others, including trust-deposit banks, not only without relief, but cruelly discredited and more certainly exposed to disaster than if no such circulation had been issued.

This discredit would operate all over the country and affect all banks and industries. If the whole $500,000,000 proposed to be authorized was issued, it would not long stay a panic in New York City, and it would bear to the deposit bank liability of the country the relation of less than $1 to $25, and to the same liability in New York City alone of less than $1 to $5.

In this I have left out of view the whole question of loan liability and general business requirements that have to be considered when a panic is on and more currency is demanded.

Should the bill unfortunately become a law, the consolation will come that it will be found so impossible, impracticable, and dangerous that nobody will dream of attempting to put it into operation.

But of the about 6,700 national banks in existence, it would not be possible for one-tenth of them to form such an association. Not ten national banks in other than a large city, if there, would agree to unite in so dangerous an undertaking, but, if willing, there are few Congressional districts or territory where enough national banks could be found with the required capital and surplus—$5,000,000—should they be willing to unite.

Most national banks in the center West and in the South and West have taken out circulation equal to their capital stock, so only their surplus could be counted. It would take fifty such banks, with an average surplus of $100,000—impossible to be found and united—to form one so-called "clearing-house association."

It would take 100 such banks with $100,000 capital, each with a 50 per cent average surplus, to form such an association.

It would take 250 such banks with $100,000 capital, each with the 20 per cent surplus required by existing law, to form an association.

It may be easily demonstrated that such an association could not be formed by any possibility in more than a few of the large cities of the country, and only possible there with a financial panic threatening and certain to come.

The bill is therefore viewed in the most favorable light only by possibility to be used by or availed of under extraordinary conditions by a small per cent of the national banks in a few localities, each of which possesses dangerous conditions which demand "additional circulation."

But should not our legislation for relief in a financial emergency be for the relief of the whole people, including all banks, not merely a few national banks where abnormal conditions are liable to be brought about by them and others adopting wholly unjustifiable business methods and ventures?

It is anomalous to authorize a bank or association to use its depositors' money to buy securities, including commercial paper, which may be pledged to get 75 per cent of their cash value with which to pay those same depositors. And this it could only do once. The same or other depositors could not have this relief a second time from the same bank.

I have not time, if it were necessary, to point out how the gold standard of the United States would be jeopardized by making the Government the redeemer of national banks that deposit all kinds of securities, and of part of the national-bank notes and not all of them. If for one national bank, why should it not redeem all national-bank currency, and all similarly or equally secured notes of all other banks?

The redemption feature is without precedent. It is sometimes said the United States redeems national-bank notes now. Not so. It redeems no note of any national bank, solvent or insolvent, until it has the money or its equivalent to do it with. Even in case of redemption and cancellation of mutilated currency it is charged up against the 5 per cent redemption fund the bank is required to keep, and if that becomes exhausted no new currency is sent the bank until it is made good.

It is said the bill now before the House does not require the Government to redeem the additional circulation. This is a mistake. It is true that somebody has taken the responsibility to change the bill of the conference (section 9) so as to exclude from the recitation in the notes of the whole truth by omitting from them that "they will be redeemed by the United States." The bill otherwise remains unchanged, and section 3 and other parts thereof leave the Government liable to redeem the notes.

Should the holders of the additional currency be seized with the desire to present it for redemption the Government would have to redeem it in lawful money forthwith and sell the securities, and so forth, to make good, and there would be a sudden contraction of the currency, no matter how much it was needed to maintain an abnormally inflated business brought about by its issue. The bank to which it belonged could not avail itself of the right to keep it afloat. And when once redeemed it must be canceled and never reissued, or the Government might have to redeem it often and after the securities and all assets of the banks were exhausted. Such currency would be made the means of drawing the gold and other lawful money from the Treasury of the United States, thus endangering the gold reserve and the gold standard. Instead of inflating the currency it might be made the means of contracting it.

There is no provision to regulate the amount of securities one of the association's banks may put up. It seems each such bank may put up as much or as little as it pleases, or none. The bank that does not put up must shut up. It can get no sugar—no relief. If its embarrassed circumstances are such as to require relief and they are such as to leave it without securities to deposit, it must go to the wall, though its associate and unembarrassed associates needing no relief have abundance and might avail themselves of additional circulation. But in one respect the weak, needy, and embarrassed bank or banks belonging to the association are not to be neglected.

As between the banks of the association each bank is to be held liable for the redemption of the additional circulation issued to the association, whether or not it got the benefit of it, "in the proportion that its capital and surplus bears to the aggregate capital and surplus of all such banks." (Section 3.)

The committee which traveled and brought forth this currency monstrosity kept the parable of the talent in mind:

For unto everyone that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

Besides, the unbusinesslike and dangerous plan of authorizing a bank to use its deposits to make loans and purchase securities on which it may obtain 75 per cent of their cash value in circulating notes with which to pay the depositors and others, and to do business, thus placing the securities beyond reach of the depositors if the deposits are not paid on demand. And the national-bank notes issued under now existing law are to have the assets of a bank, including its deposited bonds to secure circulation, that joins such an association withdrawn from primary liability for the payment of such notes. The national banking laws now dedicate all a bank's assets to the payment of its depositors, and especially sets aside the United States bonds deposited to secure circulating bank notes to their payment. The complaint may not be so much on account of the security and safety of the additional notes as on account of the endangered security of the other national-bank notes.

Mr. VREELAND, the putative father of the bill in its earlier stages of evolution, or devolution, I understand, interprets the provisions of the bill to allow the United States bonds deposited to secure circulation to be sold at public sale to pay the additional circulation to be issued. The language used, as we have seen, warrants this interpretation. All assets of the associated banks, without exception as to kind, are to be exhausted to protect the Government in its redemption in lawful money of the additional currency. These bonds and the other pledged securities and commercial paper are to be sold on a five or ten days' notice, at public sale, to secure the Government in its redemption of the additional notes. This would, in general, result in their bringing at such forced sale probably not more than half of their real value, which would insure disaster and loss to fall somewhere.

The result would be that the people would soon understand that the notes issued primarily by an association bank were not in fact secured by its deposited bonds or its natural assets, and they would become fiat notes in the business world, and consequently and naturally and rightfully all national-bank currency would be discredited because of the doubtful character of an intermingled part of it. The discriminating business world would lose confidence in all our national-bank currency. If there are those who think an impractical or dangerous banking makeshift will not be rightfully understood and condemned by bankers and business men, they will soon be undeceived. There are those who here profess to placate the disturbed common people by exclaiming that we are called on to make financial laws for them and not for bankers. They have too low an estimate of the people and their constituents when they suppose they expect a favorable financial system that is not based on a well-protected and a sound general banking system. The whole business public will look with apprehension and condemnation on any legislation that strikes a blow at our present national banking system—a system which has furnished for forty-five years the best and safest circulating notes the world has ever enjoyed. Our constituents will not be appeased in their demands for currency legislation by a dangerous stab at the wise legislation we now have.

Business is recovering its normal state; even stocks are fast closing up to their usual selling values. Confidence needs only to be restored and the money will come from its hiding places. More money to command business is not needed, but more business to command money is what is needed. Sound business methods will restore confidence, and everywhere the wheels of industry will move and the idle will be employed at remunerating wages.

The October panic was a prosperity panic. When it came, and after the reaction came, we were still doing more in aggregate business value than in the immediate years before and, in general, more than twice as much as was done in this country ten years before.

Some people were not able to keep up the progressive business pace they had set for themselves and they consequently suffered some disaster and disappointment and the whole country for a time suffered.

The proposed legislation is too late to cure the last panic. Bad legislation will not avert or cure another such financial panic; it may promote it. Let us legislate to eradicate the cause of a panic and not alone to try and cure it when it comes. To do the latter is to invite a panic and disaster.

Let us here stand for good business methods, not mere makeshifts. Let us rise above partisanship and perform that duty to our constituents and the whole country that we are charged with performing. Let us not endanger what prosperity we have by attempting under the cry of expediency untried and unusual things. Let us unite in doing those things which will produce and secure such-business enterprises as will answer the prayer of the great mass of our worthy people who are obliged to constantly pray, "Give us this day our daily bread." [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, for six months and more the entire industrial system of our country has been disturbed by the stress of a great financial panic; values are unsettled, business is paralyzed, confidence is destroyed, industry is dormant, work is scarce, millions of honest toilers are out of employment and their families suffering for the very necessities of life. The cause to a great extent, we are told, is our deplorable banking and currency laws. It seems clear to me that at such a time the Congress should exercise extreme care in legislating to correct the evils in order to restore confidence. We should construct and enact legislation with a view to eliminate permanently the admitted mistakes, and at the same time make sure to protect the rights of the people. No slipshod emergency legislation will cure the glaring evils of existing banking and currency laws. Conditions will not improve until our financial policy is changed. Whatever is done in the matter now should be done carefully, deliberately, conservatively, and constructively with a view to permanency. Our banking and currency laws are inadequate, obsolete, and a disgrace to the nation—a veritable crazy quilt of patchwork—but nothing is offered by the Republicans as a safe and lasting remedy to take their place.

We have been in session since the 2d day of last December; we shall adjourn ere the 1st of June; yet nothing has been done, and it seems doubtful if anything of lasting benefit will be done. The Republicans are in control of both branches of Congress; this panic is their panic; they are charged with the responsibility of constructing and passing legislation to remedy existing evils, and if they fail to meet the requirements of the hour they must be held accountable by the people.

The present display of ignorance and incompetency on the part of the Republican leaders in Congress regarding banking and currency reform is a lamentable commentary on their boast of constructive ability to inaugurate safe and permanent legislation.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion honest currency reform is one of the most important questions of the hour. We should adopt a governmental currency system that will work automatically and expand and contract with the demands of the country. Congress should act in this matter and place our banking and currency systems on a stable, businesslike, and permanent basis that will prevent in the future monetary panics and financial stringency. Every intelligent man who has studied the subject knows that we have the worst currency and banking laws of any civilized country in the world. Our banking laws are juggled—against the people and for the national banks. Our currency laws are obsolete and inadequate—the merest kind of patchwork, a regular crazy quilt, a disgrace to our business intelligence, and an indictment against our legislative acumen and political sagacity. They must be changed and reformed along intelligent lines, in the interest of all the people, and based on the well-established principles of the currency and banking laws of all the other great powers, where runs on banks are practically unknown, hoarding of money unprofitable, financial stringency infrequent, and money panics of rare occurrence.

Let me say now what I have frequently said before, that I am now, and always have been, opposed to the Government delegating away its constitutional powers to the national banks. In my judgment they already possess entirely too much power. They are doing precisely to-day, only to a greater extent, what the United States Bank did in the days of Andrew Jackson. The right to coin and issue money is one of the greatest prerogatives of the Republic. It should not be delegated to any national bank or to any monopoly. We should resist the encroachments to-day of national banks on the liberties of the people with the same zeal and the same courage that Jackson resisted the audacious claims of the United States Bank in his day. In Jackson's day there was only one Nick Biddle. To-day there is a Nick Biddle in almost every national bank in the land.

I am opposed to this Vreeland emergency asset-currency scheme. It is a measure that ultimately will create a great banking trust and cause the greatest financial panic in all our history. It will not remedy the evil; it will only accentuate it. It is unsafe, unsound, unscientific, and the most dangerous financial departure in all our history.

Now, sir, the fallacy of our opponents that we could not have a panic while the country was under a high protective tariff, a gold standard, and a Republican Administration has been exploded. The people are now looking to the Democratic party to protect them from the selfishness of predatory wealth. The people want monopolies in restraint of trade abolished. They are tired of paying more at home for American-made goods than foreigners abroad pay for the same goods. They want legislation that will prevent future panics by the establishment of a Government central bank of issue, and in which to deposit Government funds, in place of the Republican plan of permitting the national banks to issue more promises to pay money under the name of "asset currency." As Mr. Jacob Schiff, one of the world's great bankers, recently said in an able address before the New York Chamber of Commerce:

I do not wish to pose as a Cassandra, but if our currency conditions are not changed you will have, sooner or later, such a panic that will make all previous panics look like child's play. I do not mean to say that such a panic is imminent, but it will come ultimately unless our inelastic currency is reformed.

Mr. Speaker, a central bank of the United States, such as stands to-day in every other important financial and commercial nation of the world, affords the only sure method by which the surplus funds of the Government can be kept at all times for the use of the people, from whom they have been taken by taxation; while of more far-reaching importance still is the function of such an institution to serve as a bulwark of public confidence, and through the utilization of its power to control, or to largely control, money rates, abate to a large extent the pace of public speculation. Under our present banking system a few national banks, owned by a few men of great wealth, have it in their power to contract the currency at any time and produce a financial panic involving every interest in the country and affecting every workingman in the land. There never was devised by the ingenuity of man a more specious plan for robbing his fellow-man than the national banking act. Said Salmon P. Chase, Lincoln's great Secretary of the Treasury, years afterwards, in an hour of regret:

My agency in procuring the passage of the national-bank act was the greatest financial mistake of my life. It has built up a monopoly that affects every interest in the country. It should be repealed. But before this can be accomplished the people will be arrayed on one side and the banks on the other in a contest such as we have never seen in this country.

And that great master of logic, John C. Calhoun, summed it all up when he said:

Place the money power in the hands of a combination of a few individuals and they, by expanding or contracting the currency, may raise or sink prices at pleasure, and by purchasing when at the greatest depression and selling when at the greatest elevation may command the whole property and industry of the community. The banking system concentrates and places this power in the hands of those who control it. Never was an engine invented better calculated to place the destinies of the many in the hands of the few.

Mr. Speaker, we must return to first principles. We must obey the Constitution. We must legislate on this subject and on all others for all the people and not for the benefit of the few.

Mr. WALDO. I desire to state briefly the reasons for my objection to the Vreeland currency bill now under consideration. I have been a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency for the last three years, and there have appeared before this committee leading bankers, manufacturers, and business men of the United States, and representatives of the principal financial, commercial, and business institutions and interests of the country, as well as many of the best-known and best-informed economists and writers on financial subjects; the committee has received communications from thousands of persons from all stations in life and from all parts of the United States, and all, with three exceptions, have been unanimously opposed to the principles upon which the Vreeland bill is based.

First. The bill is represented to be an emergency measure to meet a panic which is feared the coming fall. Yet, according to the reports from the Treasury Department, to prepare the plates necessary to print the new currency provided for in this bill will take a period of at least forty-eight months.

Second. To prepare these plates will cause an unnecessary expense of from three to four million dollars.

Third. It purports only to provide currency for panics, which do not occur except at periods of ten and fifteen years, and does not provide for the yearly and often daily needs of business.

Fourth. It does not provide currency responsive to business, or in time to forestall panics.

Fifth. It favors the promoting, financing, and placing of bond issues, ties up capital in permanent investments, and makes it more difficult to obtain loans upon commercial paper.

Sixth. It increases the liability of the Government to pay out gold, and is likely to cause a suspension of specie payments or the sale of Government bonds for the purchase of gold to maintain our money on a gold basis, and is a menace to our public finances and public credit in case of war or other emergency.

Seventh. By taxing the so-called "emergency currency" at a high rate, it will make it necessary for banks to charge a higher rate for loans to merchants, farmers, and business men of the country.

Eighth. The time that this system is to continue in operation under the bill is not limited. It will tend to a permanent system of emergency currency and prevent the passage of legislation for a real credit currency, which is so greatly needed by the country.

Ninth. The bill purports to be a legalization of the clearing-house system, when, as a matter of fact, it has no relation to such a system. In a true clearing-house system the clearing-house certificates are the direct liability of the clearing house, secured by the joint and several liability of the banks belonging to the clearing house, and payable by the clearing house and not by the Government. The principal business of the clearing house is to redeem the paper—that is, notes and drafts of the banks belonging to the clearing house. There is no suggestion of any such power in the so-called "clearing-house associations" under the Vreeland bill.

Under this bill, while the specific indorsement on the currency of the guaranty by the Government is removed by the amendment of this morning, the paper is still to be redeemed at the United States Treasury in the first instance in lawful money, and may be paid to the Treasury by the bank in national-bank notes. No provision whatever is made for the direct redemption of this emergency currency by the so-called "clearing-house" or by the banks for which the emergency currency is issued.

Tenth. The bank must deposit its securities with the clearing-house association and the holders of the emergency currency have in addition a first lien upon all the assets of the bank, thus working a most serious injustice to the depositors of the bank.

The measure will be of no use this year, for it will take a year to put it in operation.

The deposit of securities, the purchase of 25 per cent gold reserve to be held by the bank against the currency, the tax, and clearing-house expenses, will make this the most costly currency in the world.

Legitimate business can not afford to use it.

It will never prevent, but may heighten panic and disaster. And, lastly, as some of its supporters have already intimated, upon its passage an attempt will certainly follow to make it a permanent addition to our already badly mixed currency system and so prevent the passage of any measure for a sound currency system upon proper principles.

I can not support such a makeshift.

Illy conceived, drafted and redrafted in haste and without consideration, condemned by almost all the banking and business interests of the country, it should not be put upon our statute books.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, there can be no more important question before the Congress of the country than the one concerning the currency. It affects the national credit. It involves the integrity of the nation. It concerns the great business community, and is of vital importance to every man and woman in the land. The problems underlying this currency question are complex, to say the least, and the minds of great men, even those who have given careful study to the subject of finance, differ widely as to the proper kind of legislation or the requisite measure that ought to be enacted. We have emerged from a great panic, and the country looks to us for careful, prudent, wise, and wholesome legislation. The subject demands the best thought and closest attention that the legislator, in the conscientious discharge of his duty, can give it.

Undue haste in enacting legislation leads to grave and sometimes disagreeable results. In the enactment of statutes there should be fair deliberation, and opportunity should be afforded in this great body to permit a full discussion by those who have given study to the subject and whose wisdom and experience enable them to speak upon it and allow such amendments, reasonable in number, as may be suggested to be considered.

When this House opened this morning copies of the bill now under consideration could not be obtained. It was said that the bill was still in the hands of the Public Printer or was being brought over here from the Printing Office. The bill originally introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] had been revised, or changed, but how far, to what extent, or in what respect no one on this side seemed to know. A new bill had been introduced by them, and that is now before us. It does not come to us as other bills do, from the committee to which it was referred. It does not come to us as other bills do, accompanied with a report. On the contrary, the Committee on Banking and Currency are to be summarily discharged and the bill, hardly dry from the printing press, is to be rushed through the House under a special rule that allows but four hours' debate, cuts off absolutely the right to offer any amendment, and prevents even a suggestion which can be voted on to change a single sentence or a word.

It seems to me this is not the proper way to legislate upon this important question. If we are to have currency legislation, let us have it after the measure has received the careful attention and deliberate judgment of the House. No man is so wise, no set of men so wise, that they can not receive with some degree of profit suggestions of others equally well informed or skilled in such legislation. Yet the majority of this House insist upon forcing through at the eleventh hour, without fair opportunity of discussion, without opportunity for amendment, a bill that is far-reaching in its consequences and effects. It inaugurates a new financial policy and provides for a national financial system, as to the wisdom and expediency of which there is the greatest diversity of opinion of men skilled in the science of finance and the great financial problems that affect commerce and trade and everything else that the subject of finance necessarily involves.

In this very hour we have the evidence before us of this diversity of opinion. Although this has been made a party measure, there are still some gentlemen on the Republican side of the House who insist the measure before us is impracticable, inexpedient and unwise, and have strongly declared against it. The distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER], the learned gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], whose eloquent address on finance delivered during this session of Congress engaged the attention and secured the admiration of the Members of the House, and the learned gentleman from Ohio, a former Speaker of the House [Mr. KEIFER], have opposed the measure on the floor and refused to be whipped into line.

Surely when these distinguished Republicans assert that the bill that is to be rushed through under party rule is erroneous we may well pause and demand greater and more full consideration of the subject than the special rule of the House, against the adoption of which we protested, now affords.

This matter should not be treated or regarded as a party measure. The currency question is not a party question. In its consideration all political bias should be laid aside, and the subject treated as a business proposition. A plain business proposition. What business man would have so important a matter as that affecting the currency mixed up or involved in politics, and yet this bill is to be whipped through under party rule with four hours' debate, a practically perfunctory debate, and no amendments allowed and no intervening motion permitted. The bill, fresh from the printing press, hurried into the House, hastily examined, is to be passed by this House of Representatives!

To this method of legislation I can not lend my approval. The bill confers great and extraordinary powers upon the Secretary of the Treasury. Powers so great and so vast that I am strongly inclined to think they are too great to vest in any one man in the manner provided for in this bill, and when such powers are to be conferred surely there should be a method of safeguarding the public against their misuse.

Yet it is idle to discuss how or in what manner these powers should be restricted or the exercise of them regulated or the interests of the public with regard thereto properly safeguarded, for, under the special rule, that will be futile. There are other provisions in the bill far from satisfactory, and which require correction or material change.

It also seems to me that the number of commissioners provided for is too large. Half that number would suffice for the purpose of making proper investigation and reporting to the Congress recommendations for necessary legislation.

This objection may not be so important, but it is at least worthy of consideration. In regard to the matter of taxation and a number of other details, I believe the bill requires serious and material changes, which we can not secure under the obnoxious rule under which we are now operating.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, the whole country is deeply interested in House bill No. 21871, known as the "Vreeland currency measure." In some respects, if it became law, it would probably accomplish good. The power to meet the situation in case of financial depression and panics would doubtless to some extent be accomplished. It would give the country an elastic currency, and enable the business world to move the crops and handle the products of the people when needed.

On the other hand, the bill, on page 3, section 2, where it provides "to render available as a basis for additional circulation any securities, including commercial paper, held by a national banking association," is open to objection. It would admit railroad and other securities of a fluctuating character. Again, on page 4, the same section, the following appears:

The officers of the association may thereupon, in behalf of such bank, make application to the Comptroller of the Currency for an issue of additional circulating notes to an amount not exceeding 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities or commercial paper so deposited. The Comptroller of the Currency shall immediately transmit such application to the Secretary of the Treasury with such recommendation as he thinks proper, and if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, business conditions in the locality demand additional circulation, and if he be satisfied that a lien in favor of the United States on the securities so deposited and on the assets of the banks composing the association will be amply sufficient for the protection of the United States, he shall direct an issue of additional circulating notes to the association, on behalf of such bank, to an amount not exceeding 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities so deposited.

This gives the Secretary of the Treasury the absolute power to determine when and where increased currency is needed in any section of the country without appeal. In my judgment it is too much power in one man's hands and should be limited in some way. On page 7, section 5, the following is found:

Sec. 5. That each and every bank in such clearing-house association located in a city designated as a "central reserve city" under section 5195 of the Revised Statutes and section 1 of the act of March 3, 1887, chapter 378, shall have on hand at all times in gold or lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least 25 per cent of the total amount of the additional circulation which it may have taken out, in time of emergency, and put into circulation under this act.

This provides that 25 per cent shall be held in reserve, thus reducing the emergency currency for circulation purposes to 50 per cent.

Page 10, section 7, provides as follows:

National banking associations having circulating notes secured through clearing-house associations shall pay for the first two months a tax of 4 per cent per annum upon the average amount of such of their notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such securities, and afterwards an additional tax of 1 per cent per annum for each month until a tax of 10 per cent per annum is reached, and thereafter such tax of 10 per cent per annum, upon the average amount of such notes.

This provision may make the money thus secured an expensive matter to borrowers, for whose benefit this measure is intended, as in all cases of this kind they must always pay the cost. It is therefore, in my judgment, objectionable on this account.

Sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 of the proposed law provides for a commission to be composed of eighteen members—six from the Senate, six from the House, and six to be named by the President.

While I am in favor of a commission, I think that the one named is too large and unwieldy. Half of that number, composed of practical men, with experience in finance, would, in my judgment, be far better. However, I could vote for this commission, but can not see my way clear to support the bill now under discussion as a whole.

It is a hastily drawn-up measure and, with less than five hours in which to consider it and with no power to amend, I can not see my way clear to vote for the Vreeland bill.

When such distinguished Republicans as ex-Speaker KEIFER of Ohio, Mr. HILL of Connecticut, Mr. PRINCE of Illinois, and Mr. FOWLER, the able chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, all men of ability in the financial world are all speaking against the measure, it seems a safe policy to oppose the bill. Under these circumstances I feel impelled to vote against the proposition.

The following telegram from the president of the Twenty-third Ward Bank, one of the leading financial institutions of the Bronx, one of the most important boroughs of the Imperial city of New York, explains itself:

NEW YORK, May 14, 1908.

Hon. JOSEPH A. GOULDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Currency legislation at this time ill advised, as needs of correction exist. Haste unnecessary; pass none rather than make error. Appoint commission to confer with banking interests and act next session.

CHARLES W. BOGART.

Mr. FURNES. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time allowed me to discuss the merits or demerits of the Vreeland, so-called, banking and currency bill, I will call attention to the most objectionable features. The first is, the securities to be accepted are not defined. They should only include commercial paper and such securities which are a legal investment for savings banks in the State where the clearing house is located. This restriction would limit the security to first-class bonds, excluding also real estate mortgages. The second serious objection to the bill seems to be the large reserve the bank taking out such currency will be required to maintain. This amount should not exceed 15 per cent. It is conceded even by the majority supporting the bill that it is not a perfect bill, therefore only a makeshift. This excuse for it is certainly remarkable, considering that the committee had ample time to prepare and submit to the House a more acceptable measure. I am in favor of the provision in the bill providing for the appointment of a commission, and which should report at the earliest date possible.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it would seem, if one were to examine the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that this currency question had assumed a political phase, one side of the House favoring the Vreeland bill and the other the so-called "Williams bill." In the RECORD of March 6, 1908, I find that my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] said this to the House:

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I also hold in my hand the advance sheets of an editorial which will appear in the next issue of the Commoner from the pen of Hon. William J. Bryan, giving his opinion concerning the so-called "Williams currency bill," indorsing the same and recommending its support to Members of the House. For the same reason, to wit, that I do not desire to take up the time of the House, I ask unanimous consent that it be published as a part of my remarks.

It will be noted that the gentleman did not wait for publication in the Commoner. He had advance sheets, and the matter was of such importance that it was immediately presented for publication here in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD before it went to the newspaper, in the columns of which it was to appear. I read some extracts. Part of the editorial is as follows—bear in mind that this is from the Commoner:

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, the Democratic leader of the House of Representatives, has introduced a bill, a copy of which will be found upon another page. It was introduced after a conference with other Democrats of the Senate and House—a conference which Mr. Bryan attended—and has the support of practically all of the Democrats.

Later on this is said:

Mr. WILLIAMS has rendered his party a distinguished service in presenting this currency reform measure. The Democrats can afford to support it unconditionally and then ask the judgment of the country between it and the measures proposed by the Republican leaders. The Williams bill meets the difficulty from the standpoint of all the people; the Fowler bill and the Aldrich bill look to the interest of the bankers alone.

So it would not seem that it was in any spirit of humor that this rule was presented this morning in the form in which it appears, but that it was because of the fact that the Democratic party has a record upon this subject as set forth in the official publication of the House; and we now say to our Democratic friends, "Let us choose between these two measures; you concur with us that something ought to be done; you say your bill should pass, and we say our bill should be enacted."

Just in this connection I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not willing to adopt this policy of waiting until another session or another year before doing anything. It is possible that in view of the great slackening of enterprise, and in view of the diminished employment of labor, there may be no currency panic next autumn; but that man would indeed be bold who would run the chance. I admit the impeachment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] that I said a bumper crop might necessitate additional issues of currency. I want to emphasize to this House the familiar saying, "A burnt child dreads the fire." We shall find that next autumn bankers will be exceedingly careful about letting out their reserves, and we shall see manifestations of caution in the withholding funds from their customers to a degree which has not appeared for many years past. So let us take heed to do our duty to the country.

Much of the discussion this afternoon has not been very illuminating. I listened to a little dialogue a few minutes ago. One gentleman pointed out what dire results would come, how the five hundred millions to be issued under this plan would be exhausted, and the panic would still continue; how depositors would be clamoring for the money, and another, who fraternally nodded assent, yet said that no currency could be issued under this bill at all. This shows the difference between mere captious opposition and the responsibility for substantive legislation. I desire to state for one that there is no coterie of friends behind me in my advocacy of this measure, and that no so-called "leaders" have led me to favor it. My own judgment has approved it, not as a perfect measure, not as a measure that can be accepted as permanent, but as the best which we can adopt. It has the foundation of experience behind it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman permit—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. In a moment. It is based upon the best of methods adopted by clearing houses, methods which have saved the country from disasters more acute than those which actually occurred and from the far-reaching and destructive influences of panics. It compels the joining together in associations of banks in the same locality—a most natural principle of affiliation: It requires them to hold jointly an aggregate of not less than $5,000,000 of capital and surplus; it compels them to pledge promissory notes or securities to an amount one-third greater than the amount of the currency which they may issue; and last of all there is a paramount lien on the assets of all the banks which join in the issuance of this currency—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. In just a moment, when I finish this point, I will answer. So much for the security of the noteholder; and I make bold to tell you that the people of the United States are not going to adopt any currency or accept any currency which does not give absolute security to the noteholder. Such security is honest and fair to him; and it is for the welfare of the people. Deficient provisions in this regard have been one reason why many propositions of bankers, merchants, and others, who have come here, have not been accepted.

They ought not to have been accepted, because just as the greenbacks and national-bank notes for forty-five years have been safe so should any additional issue of currency be safe. There is further safety in the requirement that the Government shall receive a tax at the rate of 4 per cent per annum for the first two months on all the currency issued and at the rate of an additional 1 per cent per annum for each succeeding month. Of the guaranty by the Government it is scarcely necessary to speak.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will if the gentleman from New York will allow me to answer the gentleman from Mississippi first.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Ohio spoke of safeguarding the debt of the bank in the shape of notes. Now, does the gentleman tell the House that this bill does not sacrifice the security of the depositor in order to secure the note holder?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. By no means. Let me answer that question first—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask this, and then you can answer both afterwards. Is it not true that your bill gives a first lien for the payment of the note, and does not that necessarily decrease the security of the depositor to that extent?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Yes, and no. It is a rational feature of any banking system that circulating notes should have a paramount lien, that they should be secured first of all. They pass current everywhere in the country and are accepted by persons of limited means as well as by those who are readily imposed upon. The depositor knows about the condition of the bank. Presumably it is directly under his eye, and very probably he is receiving loans from it. Now, for your second question. Does this plan diminish the security of the depositor? I say "no." Why? Because it is for the good of the bank, not alone to insure its general stability, but also to insure to the depositor ready payment on demand. It is desirable that the bank should utilize every agency which makes it safe and efficient in doing its work. If the time should come when the bank must close its doors and deny payment to its depositors because it has no currency, no greater injury could be done to them; but if, instead it has a ready means for issuing bills and for keeping alive its business and maintaining its standing in the community, that surely would be a help rather than a detriment to the depositor. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, the question I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio is this: If this scheme of emergency currency be ample to meet an emergency, why is it not the best currency for everybody, and why does the gentleman treat it as temporary?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Because there are two classes of demands for currency; one is made up of normal and usual demands, the other of demands which arise under exceptional circumstances or at exceptional seasons. I must distinctly deny the statements made here twice to-day that there neither is nor could be any such thing as an emergency currency. There is a currency which the Bank of England has been authorized to issue when suspension of the bank—

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Bank of England is authorized to suspend the bank act? Does the gentleman mean to say that is a permanent feature of the English financial system?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No; only an emergency feature.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman mean to say it is a feature of the English financial system—emergency or otherwise?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would say by custom, which is stronger there than anything else. It has been done three times, or whenever there has been anything unusually severe in the form of currency panics. I must decline to yield further.

Mr. COCKRAN. I was going to suggest that the gentleman is a lawyer, and custom can not exist upon three experiences in sixty years.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It may not be a law on the statute books.

Mr. COCKRAN. Or custom either.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Also, there is the law of Germany providing for an emergency currency taxed at 5 per cent. Not only is the currency, which is provided for, safe, but it has the best possible safeguard against inflation. There can be no inflation in a currency which is subject, during the first two months of issue, to a tax of 4 per cent, such as I have already explained. In computing the amount of this tax, you must remember that a reserve must be maintained against notes issued, and that means 5.33 per cent for banks in central reserve cities for the first two months, and 6.58 for the third month.

The minimum tax to be paid by any bank at any time is that for those outside of reserve cities, and would amount, after allowing for interest on reserves deposited, to approximately 4.7 per cent. No such currency as that, subject to so heavy a tax, can be a factor in creating inflation. It will be only used at a time when money is scarce and loans command an unusual figure.

I want to turn, now, very briefly to the remarks of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. He says that the Secretary has an unusual authority, and complains that the people are not sufficiently regarded. The gentleman himself, on analysis, will realize that he can not make this a question between the Secretary of the Treasury and the people. Treat it as you may, the granting of this authority to issue currency raises a question between the Secretary and the banks. And when the gentleman speaks with fear of the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, he is unconsciously advocating giving a larger license to the banking institutions of the country. I say that for one I favor lodging that authority with the Secretary and allowing him, under the great responsibilities of his position, to determine the amount of issues rather than to leave the decision to the banks.

He would not do any of the things of which the gentleman from Kentucky spoke. There are executive acts which are theoretically possible, but which the incumbents, with their weighty responsibility, would never dare perform, because they would know that if their course was marked by favoritism or injustice they would be discredited while living and dishonored when dead. The Secretary of the Treasury, in discharging the discretionary powers of that office, would sooner stand upright and erect against an assassin's pistol than violate his duty in such a case.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman will not contend that the Secretary of the Treasury could know more about whether a community, say in Mississippi or in Kansas, needed money than the bankers' association itself, will he?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The Secretary of the Treasury would take this into account, that money would flow from the source from which it could be most conveniently distributed. The distribution of money is like that of water from reservoirs connected by pipes; and the course he would inevitably pursue under these regulations provided would be to merely retain his right of approval on the applications that would be presented. They would probably come, in the first instance, from the banks in the larger centers, and then, later, if the stress continued and was severe, radiate out to the remotest portions of the country.

I trust that the gentleman from New York, who questioned me this morning, will not consider this as a political measure. And yet times have arisen when in questions relating to finance men have been compelled to divide upon political lines. When there was criticism of greenback and national bonds in the civil war, the cry was raised, and never more loudly, that their issue was designed for the benefit of Wall street and that the measures authorizing them were political. When I listen to telegrams and letters from bankers and merchants, such as have been read to-day, assailing those who favor this measure, I am forced to the conclusion that such persons would not be apt to send messages abusing those who are seeking to solve problems of legislation, and to solve them as wisely as they can, unless they had some particular interest to be subserved by legislation here in Washington.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, for many years I have sat at the feet of Gamaliel, and have never known his intellect muddled until to-day. He has just made a speech of eighteen minutes containing two propositions. First, a denial that the Secretaries of the Treasury can be anything except salubrious patriots and can show no favoritism, when the gentleman from Ohio knows as well as I do that in selecting national depositories the utmost favoritism, of a personal and political character, are every week displayed by the Treasury Department.

His next proposition was this: That is, after admitting that the late panic was a depositors' panic, he produces for it this bill as a remedy, which consists in what? Decreasing the security and increasing the risk of the depositor in order to create an emergency currency. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No further reply is necessary to the eighteen-minute speech of the gentleman from Ohio. It merely illustrates how badly an abominable cause may muddy a usually clear intellect. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, one peculiar feature of this proposal is the fact that its supporters seek to justify it by prophecy. I suppose this is due to the fact that certainly it can not be justified by precedent. It is an entirely new departure in finance, the most radical innovation ever proposed to a legislative body. I may say in passing that the degradation of the House has never been more clearly shown than to-day when its own Members voted that any debate here of this startling proposal to embark in an entirely novel experiment in currency can be of such little value to the country that three hours of it are sufficient if not excessive. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And, Mr. Speaker, while such a suggestion, coming from the ordinary leaders of the House, might have grieved us, still long familiarity with their manner of treating us would probably have prevented us from being shocked by it. But to find an attitude so contemptuous of our membership sustained by a man whom we on this side have always considered the one statesman on the other side big enough to rise above party limitations, or party machinery, or party manipulation on a question affecting the integrity of the House or its honor, was so unexpected that we were not merely shocked, we were plunged in distress and disappointment little short of absolute despair. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I repeat this bill is offered to us on the faith of prophecy. If the prophecy were by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] it might be considered of some weight, but prophecy on a matter so delicate and difficult by other gentlemen, who have ventured it blithely, must be considered—well, as showing temerity on the part of the prophets rather than merit in their prophecies. [Laughter.]

One other measure in my recollection was passed through Congress on the faith of prophecy. That was the Sherman silver law. The country was told then—and it is worth your while to take up the Record of that session and read the debates—just to see how a similar vein of prophecy animated it—the country was told then, by the Republican majority at the time, that the Sherman law would effectively bridge the widening chasm between the two metals, linking gold and silver so firmly together in a permanent ratio of value that no condition could disturb or dislocate, and that for all time we would enjoy the benefits and wonders of what in those days was called the "double standard."

I was not a Member of the House when that measure was enacted. It was passed, I think, in August. In October following, at the Democratic convention of New York County, while the country was ringing with the approving shouts of its proposers I denounced it, declaring that embedded in the body of the law was a seed of repudiation which would germinate and grow so rapidly that inside of three years there would be an uprising against it by the very men who had so clamorously demanded that it be passed.

Sir, that prophecy was vindicated to the letter. And here upon this floor I venture now to prophesy that this scheme will entail greater disaster upon the country. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] declared it would be a temporary shield against the perils that threaten our financial stability. I say it will prove to be a deadly blight to our credit and a crushing burden on our commercial system. The proof, Mr. Speaker, that no one really believes this measure to be meritorious is that its supporters in discussing it employ terms which do not make clear, but render densely obscure, its operation, scope, and effect. A new phrase is added to the terminology of our political discussions.

An emergency currency we are told is necessary. I believed the gentleman from Ohio, who is a philosopher even when he has forgotten to be a patriot, would have defined this emergency with which we must cope. Emergency currency! Why, the phrase is a contradiction in terms. That which is only current at intervals—in an emergency—is not currency at all. [Applause.] Currency to be currency must circulate not only in times of emergency, but it must be always current.

But we are told that this currency is to have some especial, though not quite clear, virtue by which it will be able to still commotion, inspire confidence, and avert panic; that it will meet, surmount, compose every emergency.

Now, conceive for a moment what the advocates of this measure pretend to claim for it and then consider the way they propose to treat this supreme discovery of the Republican caucus. They say this scheme will make our banking system absolutely secure, because it will suffice to meet any emergency. Then, in Heaven's name, what better currency system was ever devised? What better system could be conceived? A currency that can meet and compose every emergency is the last triumph of financial genius and statesmanship. No other in all the world is equal to it. And yet you provide for a commission, as the gentleman from New York informs us, to find out how a better system is to be established. Better than perfection? For this scheme is perfection if it bear the fruit which you profess to expect from it. To change it would be to reduce our financial system from the perfection on which you claim this measure will establish it to the plane of inferiority, which is the best any other method of legislation has been able to reach. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But let us go a little further. I knew the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] could not even for a moment forget to be a philosopher, to whatever other lapses of forgetfulness he might be subject. He explained the emergency. What is it? If you blow away the froth from the gentleman's rhetoric, it will be easy to realize just what he means. I will tell you in fewer words what the emergency is. It is that banks at certain times, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] told you are called upon to pay their depositors, and they find it inconvenient or impossible to meet the demand.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. COCKRAN. No; I can not yield. If you will get me more time I will gladly yield to you.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I thought possibly the gentleman from New York would extend a little reciprocity—

Mr. COCKRAN. I should be glad to do it, but my time will not permit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, let us see. I do not think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and I differ very widely about the actual character of the emergency this currency is intended to meet. Our differences, if they exist, are not about facts, but about the terms employed to describe them, and these, I think, he will not question if I explain them a little further. The relationship between a bank and its depositors is primarily and above all an obligation of the bank to pay back on demand the money deposited with it; not to pay it with something else that it may consider as good as money, but to pay it in money itself. Anything may be good as money. My old shoes are as good as money. They are good for just as much money as I can obtain for them, but they are not money. Banks under a proper system—indeed under any system of which I have ever heard—can not satisfy demands of their depositors by offering them in shoes or clothes, or tables, or houses, or lands, or anything but money. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the money they are bound to return is the same kind of money which they have received.

Now, the avowed object of this measure is to permit payment by banks of their debts in a different kind of money from that in which the debt was contracted. This is vicious to morals and ruinous in economics. When I am required to pay an obligation and I fail, what is the penalty? Exclusion from the ranks of active business. My business must be suspended, for the capital with which I operate it is taken out of my hands and devoted to the payment of my creditors as far as it will go. Under this law should a bank fail to meet its obligations, it need not suspend. Oh, no; it is not a failure; it is not a default; it is not bankruptcy. It is an emergency. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And how is the emergency met? The worthless, unmarketable stuff in which the officers have speculated with your deposits and mine is accepted by the Government as security on which notes may be issued to satisfy their money obligations. In other words, when the assets of a mismanaged bank are of no value in the market, the Government allows the bank officers to use as money these monuments of their recklessness and their fraud. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, any system that permits a doubt, or even the shadow of a doubt, that banks will redeem literally and exactly every obligation, is a fatal bow to credit and an insuperable barrier to prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I had time to explain here the economic aspects of this measure. Its inevitable effect must be to drive banks from the field of discount, which is their natural function, to the purchase of securities, which is forcing them into the field of investment, where they have no business at all. Every dollar received by a bank, exclusive of reserves, should be employed in discount. By that means all its funds are made available for the depositors when they seek, each in turn, to borrow sufficient to meet occasional demands in their business.

This measure, indeed, says the banks can use all their securities, including commercial paper, as a basis for circulation. But if this bill becomes law they will have little or no commercial paper to offer for any purpose. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The danger of banking is the temptation to speculation which always besets bank officers. This measure will aggravate these temptations to engage in reckless speculation, since it makes the Government stand behind these faithless officials to shield them from the consequences of their crimes when the crimes turn out to be unprofitable. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

During this whole session the people have been demanding, as some of your own newspapers have told you—as the President has more than once reminded you—measures to equalize the operation of the law. The President revolts at the injustice of a system which holds blacklisting a lawful act and denounces boycotting as a criminal offense. He realizes, whatever fine-spun arguments may seek to justify those conclusions, that blacklisting takes away the bread of the laborer, while boycotting merely affects the profits of the employer, and he demands that this inequality be corrected. Yet you have not found time to pass an act remedying that indefensible condition of the law.

But when the banks—no; it is not the bankers who demand this; there is not an honest or sensible man actually engaged in the business of banking, of taking money on deposit and loaning it on discount, who favors this proposal. But the predatory financiers who have obtained possession of banks as a feature of their operations demand it. They have cracked the whip over you, and you are dancing to the music of that imperious signal as you move to enact this legislation. This bill will pass. The men who really control the Government have decreed its passage. And you, who are here to do the bidding of the party raised to power and kept in power by their subscriptions, must obey their orders or accept your own defeat. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNET of New York). The gentleman from New York has eighteen minutes remaining and the gentleman from Mississippi two minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would ask the gentleman from New York if he proposes to consume his entire eighteen minutes in one speech?

Mr. VREELAND. I will use it all but one minute in one speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the gentleman from New York, then, to yield that minute.

Mr. VREELAND. I prize that minute very highly, and I can not let it go.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that under the ordinary ethics of debate, while the gentleman has the right to conclude, he has not the right to make two concluding speeches.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I can never withhold my admiration when my colleague from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], who has just spoken, addresses the House. It seemed especially rich to me when he accused the gentleman from Ohio of inconsistency. I shall expect, Mr. Speaker, that at the close of another year my colleague from New York will be standing up here and eloquently defending and declaring for this bill before us to-day, because he has spoken with equal facility upon both sides of every question that has been before the American people for the last ten years. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, on the 1st day of last October the American people were blessed with great prosperity. Everywhere the millions of our people were engaged in gainful occupations. Our mills and factories were unable to fill their orders. The consuming power of our people had never been greater. The railroads of the country could not furnish sufficient cars to move the products of farm and factory. It is true that what we may call overprosperity had used up our available capital. It is true that liquidation in the stock exchanges had been going on for some time. Under the influence of higher rates of interest we were gradually slackening our speed. During the month of October a great bank in New York City closed its doors.

I need not go into the reasons for it. The people of New York City took fright and commenced drawing their deposits from other banks. The bankers clear across the continent to the Pacific became alarmed lest their reserves could not be had when called for, and all tried to draw their money from New York in cash at one time. The result was that the New York banks were obliged to refuse payment, and a general suspension of cash payment took place throughout the United States. The deposits in the banks of this country are over $13,000,000,000. We have in the United States of all kinds of money something over $3,000,000,000, more than half of it in the pockets of the people. It is evident, then, that when the country endeavored to change its business, 90 per cent of which is ordinarily done on a credit basis, to a cash basis, the result was a general stoppage and paralysis of the business of the country. Why did all of the bankers clear to the Pacific coast, almost as one body, endeavor to draw their reserves from New York? Because they knew the supply of money was limited. Because they knew that if they were unable to draw their reserves from New York they were thrown back upon the cash in their vaults, and that nowhere on earth, at least within reasonable time, could more cash be obtained.

The panic of last October was a great calamity which cost the people more than ten times in money the total cost of the Spanish war. It was a calamity which cost us ten thousand times as much in suffering of the American people as did the Spanish war. It was a panic which could not be foreseen. No Member on the other side of the Chamber has stood up in this House so far during this session and pointed out where the Republican party, through any laws which it has passed, was responsible for the panic that burst suddenly upon us last October. We know where the panic of 1893 came from. We know that the currency panic of that year followed an industrial panic, caused by fear of the country that revision of the tariff would take place along tariff-for-revenue lines. But no Democrat has yet attempted to point out that the Republican party, by reason of laws which it has passed or by reason of anything which it could have foreseen, was responsible for the sudden panic that burst upon the country in October last. That panic threw hundreds of thousands of men out of employment. That panic cost this country hundreds of millions of dollars. That panic meant that through the long winter days which we have passed men were out of work and little children suffered for food and clothing.

WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT IT?

What shall we do about it? This is the Congress to which the eyes of the people must turn for relief.

What relief can we give against these disastrous currency panics which periodically sweep over the country, which undermine the confidence of the people in our banks, and which undermine the confidence of the bankers in each other? Mr. Speaker, I believe that if this currency bill which is now before this House had been upon the statute books last October, if the banks of the great city of New York on the day after the Knickerbocker Bank closed its doors could have instantly had $150,000,000 in cash, as they could have had under this bill, that panic would never have spread outside the city of New York.

CAN WE CHANGE OUR WHOLE SYSTEM?

What legislation can we enact? There are some who are insisting that we shall change our whole currency system at this session of Congress. Mr. Speaker, it is a serious thing to change a currency system which has been in force in this country for nearly half a century. It is a serious thing to change a currency system from one where the Government of the United States is behind every dollar that circulates among the people over to some other system where the Government does not guarantee every dollar to the people. There are those who are urging us to adopt an asset or credit system of currency. What is asset currency? What is that system? It is one in which the banks issue their notes which circulate as money; it is a system in which the assets of each bank alone are a guaranty that the money is good.

It is a system in which the Government does not guarantee to the people that these notes will be paid. This would be a tremendous change, Mr. Speaker. It would mean that we must tear out of our statute books the financial act of 1900, an act placed there by the Republican party as the result of the great battle of the standards in 1896. That law, passed in 1900 by a Republican Congress, guarantees that every dollar which circulates in the United States shall be kept equal to a gold dollar, and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to use all of the resources of the United States to keep every dollar which circulates by its authority at a parity with a gold dollar. Are the people prepared for such a tremendous change? Would it be acceptable to the people? In my judgment, it would be impossible for this Congress to take such a step without knowing in advance that the people of the United States would indorse and approve it.

What, then, shall we do at this time? Mr. Speaker, we can pass this bill before the House. It is not a system of currency.

It is an addition to the existing system of currency which we have had for fifty years with which the people are familiar, so that in time of panic we can provide a great reservoir of money which can be instantly drawn upon. The political economists tell us and all history teaches us that expansion, immediate and profuse, is the only cure for a panic, but we do not want permanent inflation. Permanent inflation in our currency would only lead in the end to more panics. We provide, then, in this bill that with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, in time of great financial distress, a maximum of $500,000,000 already printed and available may be issued to national banks which comply with the conditions named in this bill, upon security which amounts to six or seven times every dollar issued. We then provide that under the influence of a high tax the moment the need for this money ceases it shall be driven out of existence.

I will append as a part of my remarks a table showing the increase of money and the kinds of money going to make up such increase in the United States for the past ten years, and also in the great commercial countries of Europe. I find that for ten years past the increase of money in the United States, year by year, has fully kept up with all of our enormous expansion and increased demands of business. We find, further, that that increase is largely in gold. We find that the percentage of our total money in gold is much larger than it was ten years ago. We find that no other great country with any other system has kept pace with us either in quantity or quality in the increased supply of money necessary for business purposes. I stand here to say that our annual increase has been ample to supply the business needs of the country. What, then, is the trouble?

WHY DO WE HAVE CURRENCY PANICS?

Why is it that periodically we have these currency famines, resulting in panic and distress throughout the country? Mr. Speaker, it is because we have not followed the example of the great commercial nations abroad and provided a secondary reserve upon which we shall draw only in time of great need.

I might illustrate it by taking the case of a town which has an abundant supply of pure water for its ordinary and normal needs, but if a great fire breaks out and a conflagration is threatened it has no reservoir upon which it can draw to prevent or extinguish such conflagration. What we are proposing in this bill is to supply a reservoir to be drawn upon only in case of fire. It needs no financial expert to understand this plan. It is one which will appeal to the common sense of the American people. We have all the money that we need for the ordinary normal demands of business, year after year, but when some great bank in New York closes its doors, when there is some international complication, when there is some fear that the Democratic party may be restored to power, when fear falls upon the hearts of the people, we find that our 20,000 separate and integral units composing our banking system fall apart. Each one desires to protect itself and they draw upon New York for their money; they draw all together for their money, and the result is that our system fails, our banks are obliged to suspend payment, hundreds of thousands of men are thrown out of employment, and suffering and loss is spread among the people.

EVERY OTHER GREAT COUNTRY A REMEDY.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here to say that there is no other great commercial country on this earth which has not, under some form, a remedy such as is provided in this bill. Let us take the case of Great Britain, second only to the United States as a great commercial country. Great Britain has the most rigid and inelastic currency system of any of the great nations. The Bank of England substantially issues all of the currency for England. About $80,000,000 of their bank notes are issued on Government consols. Beyond that, for every Bank of England note issued an equal amount of gold must be deposited in the bank. The banks of Great Britain are not required by law to keep reserves within their vaults. As a rule, the great stock-company banks of Great Britain keep their reserves in the Bank of England. What do they do in case of panic? Where do they get their increased supply of money with which to rapidly inflate the currency when fear and panic falls upon the people? The bank applies to the Government and the Government suspends the bank act.

ENGLAND SUSPENDS THE BANK ACT.

What does that mean? It means that the Bank of England may then put forth unlimited quantities of bank notes without an equal amount of gold being deposited against it. It means that any bank in Great Britain can take its securities to the Bank of England, rediscount them, and receive Bank of England notes in exchange. It means that there can be no currency famine. Three times in its history, to stop panic, the bank act has been suspended. The result has always been the same, and it has now come to pass that the mere announcement that the bank act has been suspended is sufficient to instantly restore confidence and stop panic. When the panic is over the Bank of England gradually withdraws its notes from circulation and goes back upon its normal basis of having an equal amount of gold for all notes outstanding.

GERMAN SYSTEM.

We are all familiar with the German system. In Germany the Imperial Bank, under Government control, issues a great part of the currency of the country. The Imperial Bank must keep 33½ per cent of gold as a reserve against all notes issued.

The Government arbitrarily limits the amounts of such notes in circulation to $117,000,000, but in time of financial stress the Imperial Bank can exceed this legal limit of notes issued to any extent with the permission of the Government by paying a tax of 5 per cent upon such excess issues. Here, then, adapted to the German system is the same provision which we are seeking to enact into law under this bill, where unlimited amounts of money may come out with the permission of the Government to avert or relieve financial panic, but with such a tax upon it that it is driven out of existence as fast as the financial pressure is withdrawn. Austria has the same provision. France has similar provisions adapted to her system. These great countries have no guaranty of deposits. The people who deposit

In their banks are not dissimilar from the people who deposit in our banks. Yet these countries have long since ceased to have currency famines and runs upon their banks. Why, if you read the history of the Bank of England you will find that fifty or sixty years ago the banks issued clearing-house certificates in the city of London to tide over panic. You might think you are reading about the condition which existed in the cities of the United States only last fall.

Out of their longer experience they have done away with currency famines. How have they done it? Not by having more money than we have; not by having better money than we have, but by having a reserve of money which can be drawn upon in time of panic, a reservoir in case of fire, such as is provided in the bill now before the House.

Last October the Bank of England had in its vaults $165,000,000 of gold. The Treasury building in this city contains nearly a billion and a quarter millions of dollars in gold. That sum of gold in the Bank of England represented not only the bank notes in circulation but it represented the reserves of many of the great banks of London. We were drawing it away from them at the rate of six or seven millions of dollars a week. Why was it that the people of England did not become alarmed? Why did not the banks rush in and draw down their reserves and take it to their own vaults? That is what would have happened in this country. The reason they did not do that is because they knew that at any time in case of stress their money was not limited to that sum in the vaults of the great bank, but that the bank act could be suspended and unlimited amounts of money, in which the people had confidence, would come forth.

Would not the same causes apply here? If the people of this country knew that already printed and stored in the Treasury and subtreasuries of the country were $500,000,000 which would be instantly available in case of great need, would it not be a bulwark of confidence against panic? The greatest value of this law, in my judgment, would be that it is on the statute books. Its greatest value would be the steadiness and confidence which it would give to the people. If the people of New York City had known last October that great amounts of money were printed and lying in the subtreasury, instantly available, they would not have started a run upon the banks. Knowing they could get their money if they wanted it, they would not want it. If the people of the Pacific States had known that lying in the subtreasury at San Francisco was twenty-four or twenty-five millions of dollars which they could get in case of great need, they would not have attempted to draw their reserves from New York. They would not have had a holiday proclaimed by the governor lasting for months in order to protect the banks.

If the people of the South had known that lying in the subtreasury at New Orleans was something like eighty-five or ninety millions of dollars which, with the consent of the Government, in time of stress could be secured, through their own banks, through their own associations, upon their own assets, they would not have been so alarmed when panic broke out in New York City. They would have known that as a last resort they could take that money, send their cotton and sugar to market, and go on about their business.

WHAT IS THIS BILL?

Now, what is the plan under which we propose to issue this money? The money must be absolutely good in the eyes of the people. During all the panics of forty years the notes issued by the banks guaranteed by the United States and the notes issued direct by the Government have been hoarded the same as if they were shining gold pieces. During the panic of last October our paper money sold at a higher premium in the streets of New York than did gold.

This money, then, will be issued by the Government through the banks, the same as our present bank notes. It will be identical in form with our bank notes. It will be guaranteed by the Government, as are the present bank notes. As I shall show, the Government will have much greater security for its guaranty than it has upon bank notes issued under the present law.

CLEARING-HOUSE PRINCIPLE.

In this proposed law we are using the clearing-house principle. During every currency panic for half a century the banks of large cities have associated themselves together in clearing houses. The effect of this has been to unite their assets and resources together as if they were one bank. Instead of standing alone to meet the shock of panic, so that first the weaker banks would give way and with the growing fear and excitement the stronger ones would next be attacked and might also give way, they banded themselves together so that there was no weakest and no strongest, but one great bank, transferring its resources from one point to another as might be needed.

Clearing-house certificates would be issued to banks needing help, to secure which such bank would deliver over to the clearing-house association securities from among its assets which would be satisfactory in quality and quantity to the clearing-house association officers.

It is a fact that during the fifty years that these clearing houses have been used in time of panic never a dollar has been lost to this day. During the panic of last fall $452,000,000 of securities, 72 per cent of which was commercial paper, were deposited by banks of the New York clearing house with that association. A maximum amount of $101,000,000 in clearing-house certificates was authorized. In Pittsburgh, last October, the banks formed themselves into a similar association. In addition to certificates issued among themselves, $48,000,000 of certificates of small denominations were issued upon the united responsibility of the banks and circulated among the people as money. When the panic was over these were withdrawn and went out of existence. This is the principle which we use in this proposed legislation. We propose that not less than ten banks, having a united capital and surplus of at least $5,000,000 may associate themselves together as a clearing-house association, under rules and regulations to be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury. The machinery of organization is most simple.

The banks of New York City or any other city in twenty-four hours could form an association as provided in this bill. If, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, the business condition of the country or of the locality is such as to require additional circulation, any bank belonging to the association may deposit securities owned by it, bonds or commercial paper, with the association. If those authorized to act for the clearing-house association are satisfied with the value of such securities, they make application to the Secretary of the Treasury for additional notes, and he may, in his discretion, issue not to exceed 75 per cent of the securities so deposited in trust with the association. All of the banks belonging to the association and all their assets are liable to the Government for this circulation issued. This follows the line of the law now upon the statute books relating to our present issue of bank notes. So far as the clearing-house association is concerned its security is ample. The security deposited by the bank with the clearing-house association must be ample. The association can require as security two or three times, if it chooses, the amount of such bank notes to be issued.

The association, under the law, has a first and paramount lien upon all the assets of such bank as security for the bank notes issued. So far as the Government is concerned, its security for these notes is much greater than at present. Let us suppose that thirty banks, having capital and surplus of $15,000,000, form a clearing-house association for the purpose of getting additional circulation under this bill. They must first have 40 per cent of bond-secured circulation. The maximum amount of circulation which they obtain therefore would be $11,000,000. What security has the Government for this issue?

First, capital and surplus of thirty banks.....	$15,000,000
Stockholders' liability for, say.....	10,000,000
It has next the specific securities, probably at least twice the amount of notes issued, held in trust by the association for the United States, say.....	22,000,000
It has next a first lien upon all the other assets of all the banks belonging to the association, which would be at least.....	23,000,000

Security for maximum circulation.....	70,000,000

It then requires the banks to keep 5 per cent of the notes issued in cash in the hands of the Treasurer of the United States to pay these notes when they come in for redemption, and that redemption fund must be constantly kept good. Here, then, we have security, so far as the Government is concerned, of $70,000,000 worth of securities against an issue of $11,000,000 of bank notes. Surely no one can question the security of the United States in guaranteeing these notes, and no one will question the ability of the clearing-house association to absolutely protect itself against any loss through any constituent bank. Any bank may join these clearing-house associations if located in contiguous territory, but after such bank joins the association it depends entirely upon the will of the clearing-house association as to whether such bank can take out a dollar of circulation or not. That depends entirely upon the security which it has to offer and the need which it has for money, in the opinion of the managers of the association. Large banks and small banks can belong to these associations with equal security, because each must put up securities from among its assets which are unquestionably good in the eyes of the association.

The experience of fifty years shows that the managers of clearing-house associations take no chances as to the securities deposited with them, and during all that time not a dollar has ever been lost through a clearing-house association.

The remedy provided under this law exists at all times and in every part of the United States. The annual loss on commercial paper is less than one-eighth of 1 per cent. The banks would bring in their best securities in time of need. If they owned securities of doubtful character, they would not bring them out for other banks to see. Under the provisions of this bill banks need not invest large sums of money in particular kinds of bonds which they must carry many years, perhaps, waiting for an emergency and which they may never need. Under the provisions of the bill passed at the other end of the Capitol only State, county, municipal, and district bonds can be used for emergency circulation.

But the statements of the banks show that not more than fifty or sixty millions of bonds of this description are owned by all the national banks of the United States. Then, to take out $500,000,000 of emergency currency, in case of need, they would have to withdraw from the channels of commerce more than $400,000,000. They must provide themselves with these bonds in advance, because it is evident if a bank waits until a panic is imminent or until it has commenced, it will not benefit itself by paying out lawful money for bonds and then exchanging the bonds for 90 per cent of their value in bank notes. Hence they must be carried indefinitely waiting for this emergency. Suppose $400,000,000 should be withdrawn from the commercial field by the national banks and invested in these bonds. Is it not evident that this great sum withdrawn would mean that crops could not be moved next fall? It would produce such a stringency in the money market as to bring about the very condition which we are legislating to prevent.

Our banking system in many respects is the best that could be devised for our country. We have nearly 40 per cent of the banking capital of the world. No one can doubt that our free banking system has been a great factor in the magnificent development of our country. In every community throughout the length and breadth of our land the substantial men in every city and town can associate themselves together in providing banking capital for their own communities. I doubt if the branch banking system would suit the independent American character. Our people would not be content to be told that some manager in a distant city must be communicated with to give permission for loans to be granted in communities where branches might be established. Our people like to see and talk direct with the man in authority. It may also be doubted whether our people are ready to adopt a great central bank on the European plan, although many of our best financial thinkers consider that we must finally come to this plan. It may be years before we change our banking and currency system. In the meantime we are in constant danger that from some perhaps unexpected cause a currency panic may start and sweep over the country, carrying disaster in its train.

We are the greatest in wealth among the nations of the earth. We are not backward in boasting about the superiority of our institutions, about our enormous expansion, and our modern business methods, and yet Europe looks on amazed at the spectacle of practically all of the banks of the greatest commercial country in the world suspending cash payments. It seems to me that if we adjourn without providing a remedy for this state of affairs it will be almost criminal neglect on the part of Congress. The remedy which we propose is simple in its machinery. Associations in the cities can be completed in twenty-four hours. The principles involved have been tried by experience. It will afford protection and confidence to our people. A monetary commission, which is provided for in this bill, can take up the whole question with a view of finding out if there are other weak spots which need strengthening.

Mr. Speaker, I am not in favor of Government guaranty of deposits. I am willing to admit that if the Government of the United States puts its credit behind the enormous deposits in our banks, the people will feel secure; but I am very doubtful that anything less than a Government guaranty of deposits will prove a remedy. No one will contend that the thrifty depositors in banks should be singled out for protection except for some great public benefit. If these money panics can be stopped in no other way we may have to come to this remedy, but the older nations of Europe, without guaranty of any kind, have been able to stop money panics and runs on banks. Why, then, shall we not be able to accomplish the same result by adopting the same remedy? That remedy is provided in this bill. It will not prevent banks which are mismanaged or which are looted by their officers from failing, but it will prevent the fright growing out of the closing of this class of banks from extending into panic and runs upon other banks.

If the people know that solvent banks can readily and upon their own assets obtain plenty of cash with which to pay their depositors, then they will not want to draw their money. This principle is as old as banking. Many great bankers in the largest cities of the United States have indorsed this plan. Several State conventions of bankers have almost unanimously recommended its principles. The benefits sought for in this proposed legislation apply to every man, woman, and child in the United States. The object of this legislation is of the first magnitude in importance to the people of the United States. Let the Republican party, the great business party of the country, place it upon our statute books. [Loud applause.]

Mr. VREELAND. I reserve the remaining minute of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to two minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand I am entitled to two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, of course you and I and all of us know that this foolish Vreeland bill is never intended to become a law; that it is merely expected that the House of Representatives shall pass some act—anything—in order to get a conference with the Senate and bring out what is really intended to be enacted, with the purpose as described by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. I now yield the balance of my time on this side to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of the United States empowers and authorizes Congress to coin money and regulate its value. This grant of power is absolute and exclusive, in that it is further provided that no State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, or make anything but gold and silver a legal tender in payment of debts. The power to create money is a sovereign power, inherent in all independent governments, and is equal in dignity to the power to declare war or to make treaties of peace. It is a power that the framers of the Constitution, in my judgment, never intended to be delegated by Congress to national banks or any other agents. I am not opposed to banks nor am I unfriendly to the banking business. I recognize that banks are indispensable to the trade and commerce of the world. But when they are not honestly managed and supervised they may become a menace to the public welfare by creating panics, which are as blighting as the devastation of war. National banks have been the special favorites of the Republican party; they have had too much consideration, both in legislation and in the administration of the law. Twenty-five hundred million dollars of bonds were issued by Congress to defray the expenses of the war and as a basis for securing national bank notes, and at the same time five hundred millions of greenbacks were issued as currency. While this currency was made a legal tender for the payment of debts, public and private, except the interest on the bonds, it was not receivable in payment of import duties, and consequently it depreciated to an alarming extent, falling as low as 38 cents, and yet it was accepted at its face value in the purchase of bonds.

The bonds were made payable in lawful money, which included the depreciated greenbacks. By subsequent acts of Congress the bonds were made payable in coin, which was understood at the time to mean either gold or silver, at the option of the Government, but by interpretation it has been held to mean gold, if the bondholder demanded it, and he never fails to demand it. By this manipulation alone the bond speculators realized a thousand million dollars clear profit, wrung from the hard earnings of the American people by the most grinding and discriminating tax laws that have ever been written in the statute books of a free people. This is a long history of unwise, if not wicked, legislation in favor of national banks and against the interest of the people.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican party has already virtually surrendered the power to fix tariff-tax schedules to the manufacturers for their own benefit in the name of protection of American industries and the American laborer, and if this Aldrich-Vreeland bill should become a law, you will have surrendered the power to control the money supply to the big national banks of New York, the very banks that produced the panics of 1893 and 1907. These banks will not only be able to determine when this currency should be issued, but how much shall be issued.

And remember that every dollar that is issued will be issued to the millionaire banks with but little cost to them, and the small banks that are doing an honest and a conservative business will never receive a dollar. Doubtless you will be able to rush this bill through the House, under the lash of the party whip, without giving a reasonable time for debate and without the right to offer amendments under the gag rule adopted this morning, but you can not conceal the hideous deformity of this bill from the people, though you may deceive yourselves for the time being, but you will have to stand at the bar of public opinion and answer for this day's work. Who is interested in the passage of this bill? Nobody but the few banks that expect to get the benefits. Hundreds and thousands of banks, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, wholesale and retail merchants' associations, labor unions, and individual citizens from every State in the Union have entered and protest against the bill, and nobody, to my knowledge, has openly advocated it outside of Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Banking and Currency was appointed on December 3. I happened to be a member of that committee, and it is well known to the House and the country that most of the winter and spring has been given to the consideration of currency questions.

Public hearings were given for days and weeks, and leading financiers, bankers, and citizens, including ex-Secretary Gage and Comptroller Dawes, Samuel Gompers, and Sir Morton Frewen, member of English Parliament, and the representatives of the general business of the country, appeared before the committee, and, with one exception, condemned the principles of the Aldrich-Vreeland bill. And by a unanimous vote of the committee the Aldrich bill was laid on the table, and the Vreeland bill was also tabled. Without any report from the committee the Republican caucus combined the worst features of those bills into a new bill, and say that it shall pass this House to-day.

Mr. Speaker, the minority of the committee, with the assistance of Mr. WILLIAMS, drafted a bill which was intended to be offered as a substitute for the bill that might be proposed by the majority, naturally thinking that ample time would be given for intelligent discussion of the whole financial question, but since you have limited the discussion to three hours, with the opportunity to offer our bill as a substitute, but without any right to propose a single amendment either to your bill or ours, we have decided not to offer a substitute, knowing full well that any bill drafted by Democrats would be treated with contempt by that side of the House, and give you an opportunity and an excuse to raise a false issue in the coming campaign by attacking our bill instead of commending your own, so you now have a clear-cut issue on your bill, and by it alone you shall be judged. I understand that the bill now before the House is the fourth edition of the caucus bill of two nights ago. It is being added to and taken from in order to win recruits from the recalcitrant Republicans.

The fact is but few Republicans of this House believe that this bill should pass without amendment, but you have got to have an emergency bill to try to save the Republican party from complete rout and overthrow. You are in a dilemma. For fifteen years you have contended in Congress, on the stump, and through the press that the Democratic party made the panic in 1893 by reason of a promise to reform the tariff and that your party restored prosperity, and you have assured the people in all the campaigns that you alone could maintain prosperity. But every intelligent man knows that it has always been a false issue. Mr. Cleveland convened Congress in extra session in August, 1893. The panic had been raging for two months, and there was not a law on the statute books that was not put there by the Republican party. Mr. Cleveland insisted that the panic was due to the law providing for the purchase and coinage of silver bullion passed by a Republican Congress and signed by a Republican President in 1890. And in this view almost every Republican in the House and Senate concurred, contending that the repeal of that law would restore prosperity immediately. The law was repealed, and by and by prosperity returned, just as it will if this Congress should pass no law. It was labor, and not law, that produced the prosperity which the American people have enjoyed for the last ten years. When individuals and nations produce and sell in the markets of the world more than their necessities require them to buy, they are prosperous, independent of and in spite of laws. The balance of trade last year in favor of the United States was $500,000,000, all of which was payable in gold, and but for this large balance to our credit what the result of this panic would have been the wisest can not tell. The country survived the panic of 1893, and it will survive this panic, and the people will learn lessons of wisdom from their experience. The fact is the banks of Wall street precipitated that panic to force the country to adopt the gold standard and sell bonds, and it was done by the endless-chain process in presenting greenbacks and Treasury notes for redemption, until the gold reserve was exhausted and the Secretary was compelled to sell $260,000,000 of bonds to buy gold for redemption purposes, following the precedent of his Republican predecessor as to redemptions.

I believe however, if the course pursued by Secretary Manning in 1885 had been followed by paying the gamblers and looters silver instead of gold the panic would have been checked without the sale of bonds. Every Republican Secretary has stood by the gold-redemption policy. With only $150,000,000 as a gold reserve in the Treasury, and resting upon it are outstanding obligations in the way of silver certificates, greenbacks, and national bank notes—the enormous sum of fifteen hundred million dollars, and if this additional currency is to be issued the further burden of five hundred millions will be added. Think of this vast volume of money being converted into an absolute debt against the people with which the gold of the Treasury can be drained and the Secretary forced to sell hundreds of millions of bonds to get gold to make further and repeated redemptions. The policy of redemption as it has been used and abused is reprehensible. It has been done in the interest of high finance. Honest business has never demanded a dollar of redemption.

Mr. Speaker, I really think that the Republican party has argued itself into the belief that it has created the prosperity which the people have enjoyed for a number of years and that they alone can preserve it. I believe that nobody was more surprised when the panic came than the adherents of that party.

You boastfully declared in your campaign book of 1906, in enumerating the good things that you had done, that you "had established the gold standard which placed our monetary system on a stable basis and in harmony with the great nations of the world," and "that none but the rankest pessimist could see a cloud on the horizon."

I think all you gentlemen can see a cloud now above the horizon as big as a man's hand, and I remind you of the fate of the false prophets who had so long misled and deceived the people. You remember the calamity that befell them when they met the truth face to face on Mount Carmel, where Elijah was looking for a "cloud on the horizon." Your slogan of a "full dinner pail and prosperity" will not serve you in the coming campaign. You will face an indignant and undeceived constituency.

I know the Republican party does not admire panics and would not intentionally inflict the country with one, unless they were sure that they could charge it to the Democratic party. The country will hold you responsible for this panic and for your failure to remedy the causes that produced it.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now allude to some of the distinctive features of the bill. The object of the bill is to enable national banks to procure currency from the United States Treasury to prevent or stop a panic. It will become the duty of the Secretary upon the passage of the bill to prepare plates and dies and print in blank 50 per cent of the capital stock of all the national banks of the United States, to be held by the Comptroller of the Currency, and to be delivered according to law to the banks entitled to receive it. There must be at least ten national banks, with unimpaired capital and surplus of not less than $5,000,000, incorporated into a clearing-house association, with power to sue and be sued, to enable banks to procure this emergency currency. The basis for this circulation is any kind of securities, including stocks, bonds, and commercial paper, without regard to their par value, which national banks may have when transferred to the clearing-house association and approved by the board of trustees, provided each bank has 40 per cent of its capital stock of national-bank notes in circulation and a surplus of 20 per cent. It will be seen at a glance that the banks of some of the States have not sufficient capital to secure a clearing house, and therefore would have to gain admittance into a clearing house in an adjoining State.

The association is voluntary and the benefits to the banks are presumed to be mutual. Each must keep its capital stock and surplus intact, and will be liable for its pro rata part of the defalcations of the other banks of the association. When a bank or a number of banks may think a panic is approaching, application is made by the clearing house to the Secretary of the Treasury for an issue of currency, but the Secretary has authority to reject the application on the ground that he does not believe that the community in which the bank happens to be located needs the currency or that the security is not satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker, does any sane man believe that any bank which has wise and honest management and is doing a safe and legitimate business will become a member of any such ridiculous corporation? But the banks that gamble and speculate in money and in stocks and bonds will always be able to create, at will, a panic sufficient to induce the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to them all the currency they may desire. Banks belonging to the Clearing-House Association of New York City have a basis of securing $200,000,000 of this emergency currency, while the State of North Carolina could not secure four millions. But the ordinary, honest banks will never get a dollar of the currency, it matters not what their distress may be. It is expressly provided for the few banks that have power enough to create a panic, and it will be given to them cheap in order to induce them to be good, although you have charged 4 per cent interest per annum for the first two months and 1 per cent thereafter until 10 per cent is reached; but they will never pay more than 4 per cent, as they can surrender the currency at the end of two months and get a new supply. And to make it more attractive, the banks are not required to advance the interest out of their vaults.

To illustrate, take a bank that has a million dollars already invested in stocks, bonds, and commercial paper; the bank simply transfers its paper from its own vaults to the vaults of the clearing house, and the Secretary of the Treasury will issue to the bank $750,000 if the securities are at par, and the interest on this amount for two months would be $5,000, which amount it takes from the seven hundred and fifty thousand, and pays the interest at another window, and steps out of the Treasury with $745,000, and continues to draw interest on the securities deposited, and can loan this currency in the New York Stock Exchange for 100 per cent per annum, as was done during the panic this year. And with the consent of the clearing house of which such bank is a member one class of securities may be withdrawn and others substituted, so that when paper becomes due it can be withdrawn and collected, and new notes could be substituted in lieu of it, and these favorite banks will have the endless-chain process for all the money they may want for speculative purposes. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that any man who has given careful thought to this bill believes that the big banks which are behind it will willingly surrender the benefits which they derive from it. It is intended to be made a permanent part of our national banking system. I call attention to the fact that all the present outstanding national-bank notes which are secured by United States bonds are to be canceled on redemption by the Treasury Department, and this emergency currency is to be issued in lieu of it, in order to conceal from the public the fact that emergency currency is being issued at all times without regard to panics. You are giving such dignified recognition to panics that a bureau of panics ought to be established at once.

The bill provides for issuing $500,000,000, and the entire amount might be taken out in a week, and may be surrendered for cancellation in a week. I submit that this is too much power to intrust to any agency. The power to inflate and contract the currency puts the people at the mercy of him who exercises the power. Mr. Speaker, it is not even pretended by the author and the supporters of this bill that it will afford the relief demanded. It is a mere dope to quiet the nerves, to enable the banks of Wall street to operate more effectively on the honest business of the country until a commission can diagnose the disease and prescribe the remedy that these banks want, in order that they may further exploit their victims. It is pitiable to see a great party that has done so much, and boasted of so many things that it has not done, lie down and confess its inability to deal with the financial situation, which is touching every man and every business in the United States. The industrial enterprises of the country have suspended in many sections, and the men and women whose genius and labor have made this the greatest and richest nation of the earth are idle or working on short time and reduced wages, and hundreds of thousands in the industrial centers are being fed by the hand of charity in bread lines and soup houses, heretofore claimed by Republicans to be Democratic institutions. And the end is not yet—and you dally and delay. You could remove the principal cause that precipitated the panic last October in one hour by amending the national banking laws so as to require all national banks to keep their legal reserves in their own vaults. The law requires banks in reserve and central reserve cities to keep 25 per cent of their deposits as reserve, but permits banks in reserve cities to loan on call one-half of their reserve to central reserve banks. All other banks are required to keep 15 per cent reserve and are permitted to loan three-fifths of it to reserve and central reserve banks. And on the 1st day of August, 1907, there had been loaned or deposited the enormous sum of $614,000,000, the bulk of it in the big banks in New York City, which in turn loaned it on speculation or invested it in stocks and bonds, so that it was not available on demand. And just when the banks began to call for their money to meet the increasing demands to market the crops, a run was made on the Knickerbocker Trust Company, of New York, and this great bank, with $8,000,000 in its vaults and $60,000,000 of deposits, went to the wall, and the speculating banks, finding themselves unable to collect, took fright, and immediately the banks of the Clearing-House Association refused to pay currency on demand, and without authority of law issued clearing-house certificates to meet their money demands. The news flashed over the wires, and every bank in the United States received a shock, and the $600,000,000 loaned and deposited in the great centers was locked up or tied up, and the panic was on. Four thousand State and national banks within ten days closed their doors against the demands of their own depositors, making either limited payments or tendering clearing-house certificates over their counters when money was demanded. These banks were innocent and suffered greatly, and but for this timely action not only the banks, but the business of the country, doubtless, would have gone down in wreck and ruin. The fault is in the law. If this money had been kept at home, the panic in New York would not have disturbed the country banks.

Mr. Speaker, other grave problems are pressing hard for solution, and so far the Republican party has not been able to cope with them. The receipts are falling behind the expenditures at the rate of $5,000,000 per month, and yet this has been the most extravagant Congress in the history of the country. You will appropriate over a thousand million dollars at this session. The next fiscal year will find you facing an empty Treasury, and the sale of bonds will be inevitable, unless Providence comes to the rescue. Factories and mills are closing, and the unemployed are becoming restless. Coxey is again threatening to organize his army of tramps. The number of wage-earners who are now out of employment is something appalling.

The Ethical Social League, of New York, submitted a report on the 7th of April containing the number of unemployed in every State in the Union, aggregating 3,160,000; more than half of this number are in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and Michigan. The Southern and Western States so far have not suffered so much as the Northern and New England States. The Bureau of Labor of New York, on April 19, stated that at the close of 1907 one out of every three union men in the State was idle.

The International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Springfield, Mo., on February 1, 1908, wrote the following letter to Hon. C. W. HAMLIN, a Member of Congress from that district, which was published in the RECORD:

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS,

Springfield, Mo., February 1, 1908.

Hon. C. W. HAMLIN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am requested by your friends, the railroad men of Springfield, Mo., to write you relative to conditions on the Frisco railroad—due to the panic—in hopes that you may introduce or assist in bringing some measure before the present Congress that will relieve conditions and give the wage-earner an opportunity to work so as to earn a living for himself and loved ones dependent on him for support. The Frisco shops only work eight hours per day, four days a week, at present, and were closed twelve working days in January. To-day one-third of the employees of the shops were let out indefinitely, while on the road freight business has fallen off so crews are only making one-half time. This is true of the entire system, and starvation is staring your friends, the railroad men, in the face. The company, owing to short working hours in shops and reduction of number of employees, is unable to keep engines in repair, the result being that when freight is offered for shipment the company is unable to handle it for lack of power. I learn, through our brotherhood, the same conditions prevail on all railroads, and good men are tramping over the country hunting for employment and not able to find any. Is there not some way for Congress to relieve this condition, or is it possible that the moneyed power is supreme—that the inclosed clipping from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch about J. P. Morgan is true. Must the wage-earner come to starvation in order that dividends can be paid on watered stock and the gamblers and stock speculators grow rich? We, your friends, appeal to you, believing that in this, our hour of need, you can help us out. Awaiting your reply, and trusting that Congress will better conditions, I remain, yours, respectfully,

M. J. MURPHY,

Chairman Ozark Division 83,
Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers,
849 North Main street, Springfield, Mo.

It is estimated that the railroads of the United States employ 1,600,000 men and, according to estimates, 500,000 have been laid off in all branches of the service. The following dispatch from Baltimore to the Washington Post, dated Baltimore, March 10, says that the Baltimore and Ohio has issued the following statement:

19,200 FREIGHT CARS IDLE—B. & O. PROPERTY VALUED AT $19,200,000 NOT EARNING REVENUE.

BALTIMORE, Md., March 10.

The Baltimore and Ohio has issued the following statement: "Because of general business depression, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has 19,200 idle freight cars standing on yard and side tracks and in shops over the system, which includes the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railroad, out of 87,500 cars. Never before in the history of the Baltimore and Ohio, the pioneer railroad of the country, was there near so many cars out of service at one time. At a valuation of $1,000 per car, this represents $19,200,000 of the company's money that is not earning any revenue."

Mr. Speaker, in the face of the deplorable conditions throughout the country small politicians are making a demagogical argument to the people in some sections, insisting that local legislation with reference to regulating railroad rates brought on the panic. This is being done to avoid the responsibility of explaining to the people how the Republican party made the panic, in order to get votes. I quote from a dispatch dated Buffalo, N. Y., February 1:

The police force at West Seneca has been trebled to cope with the possibilities of an outbreak of lawlessness of the hundreds of idle and hungry foreigners formerly employed in a steel mill. A bread riot occurred last night.

[From the Springfield (Mo.) Republican.]

Calls for aid at the soup houses are increasing every day. More than 300 people were fed yesterday at the soup houses being conducted by charitable organizations of the city. Though the places opened to the public only last Saturday hundreds have applied for something to eat.

ELKHART, IND., January 29, 1908.

The Lake Shore Railway's big locomotive and allied shops, which had already been reduced to four days' work, were put on two days' work. One thousand men were affected.

I now offer in evidence as to the panic and its effects, the testimony of two eminent Republicans. Ex-Secretary of the Treasury Lyman P. Gage said in a speech before the Banking and Currency Committee:

In 1907 we were on deep waters of prosperity, when everything ought to have floated serenely, but we bumped hard. We stove open the bottom of the ship. We met with first-class disaster.

And Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, the former Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Roosevelt, said in a recent speech:

Over 300,000 freight cars standing empty on the tracks, 30,000 locomotives white leaded and out of commission, one-fourth of the population of several large cities idle, for the first time under Republican Administration free soup houses in every industrial center, and the price of farm produce naturally and materially depreciated furnish an object lesson which ought to produce a measure of sober-mindedness on the part of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, why is it that men, women, and children are walking the streets, begging for bread, in the fairest, richest, and best country on the earth? It is because the people have not heeded warning; they have been step by step led on by the delusion that prosperity has been created by laws instead of by labor and that the tariff taxes benefit those who pay them. The real causes of this panic are deeply rooted in the false and vicious tariff laws. Relief will never come by applications of porous plasters and dosing with soothing syrups.

One instance will illustrate: Under the Dingley tariff law 100 per cent is levied on Russian oils in the ports of the United States. Russia is the only country that can compete with the United States in the production of oil. And this tax gives the Standard Oil Company an absolute monopoly of all the oils sold to the people of the United States. They sold last year 6,607,194,000 gallons at 2 cents a gallon more than they charged for the same kind of oil which was shipped to Great Britain and France, netting the company on account of the tariff over $13,000,000. This discrimination is an outrage upon the American people, and oil should be immediately put on the free list. What good reason can be given for taxing all the people in order to make a few rich? This same Standard Oil Company invested its ill-gotten surplus in banking, and now owns and controls some of the largest banks in New York, which had much to do in creating the panic last fall. The Standard Oil banks are special pets of the Secretary of the Treasury. There is evidence to warrant the conclusion that the big New York banks entered into a collusion to force Congress to pass a law to give them the right to have currency issued on their stocks, bonds, and commercial paper; and when the crash came the Secretary in great haste rushed to New York and made arrangements to deposit additional money with the very banks that inaugurated the panic.

The Treasury had $268,000,000 of surplus, and by the 1st of December he had in the depositary banks of the country $228,000,000 of this surplus, which was used without paying the Government one cent of interest, and he allotted to the First National Bank and the National City Bank of New York $27,000,000, the former under the control of J. Pierpont Morgan and the latter a Standard Oil bank. These two banks were allowed more public money than all the banks of the eleven Southern States; and this money was loaned in the New York Stock Exchange by these banks at 50 per cent, and it is claimed by some charitable-minded people that Rockefeller and Morgan saved the country from financial ruin. Is it possible that the destiny of the Republic is in the keeping of a few big national banks and millionaires of New York City? If they have the power to save, they have the power to destroy. In addition, the Secretary sold Panama bonds and certificates of indebtedness to the amount of $40,000,000, and that, too, in violation of the spirit and the letter of the law, and this money was also turned over to the banks. There is not another government in Christendom that would have tolerated it.

The very fact that these banks knew that the Secretary would come to their relief in the event of distress induced them to take extraordinary risks in speculations, and it would be so with the new currency issued under this bill. In competition with these banks for Treasury favors in time of a panic the ordinary country bank would have about the same standing as Lazarus had at the gates of Dives. By and by the people, who have the power under the Constitution, will rise in righteous indignation and with their ballots unstained by the touch of the corrupter's gold will drive the despoilers of the country from their intrenchments and in their places will be put men who will stand for equality of opportunity and exact an even-handed justice before the law. I predict that the scepter will pass from your hand, and that the people will elect this year a Democratic President and a Democratic House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining minute of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I am for the Vreeland bill and not for the Williams bill. I have listened carefully to this debate, and I have failed to find that our Democratic friends, the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, have been ready to sponsor the Williams bill, notwithstanding the fact that their peerless leader, William Jennings Bryan, in the Commoner said that it was the best bill before the Congress to-day. And in order that the Democrats in this House may have an opportunity to vote upon the Williams bill, I now offer it as a substitute for the pending measure. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California offers as a substitute the bill H. R. 16730, which, under the order, the Clerk will report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to ask the Speaker whether, in the Speaker's opinion, the remarks just made by the gentleman from California were humorous or dilatory. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read. The gentleman from California offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report, and the amendment will speak for itself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, under the rule, the House must proceed to a vote without an intervening motion. The rule does not provide for the reading of the substitute, which is in a nature of debate.

The SPEAKER. The rule covers the question in the following language:

The vote shall be taken without delay or intervening motion, first, on the question of substituting H. R. 16730.

The gentleman from California, prior to the hour of 5 o'clock, offered the substitute, so that the amendment comes under the order, and the Clerk will read the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16730) to further protect depositors in banks, to secure a safe and elastic emergency currency, and to amend the national bank act and previous amendments thereto.

Be it enacted, etc., That all laws and parts of laws permitting national banking associations to keep three-fifths of their reserves in national banking associations in reserve cities and all laws and parts of laws permitting national banking associations in reserve cities to keep 50 per cent of their reserves in central reserve cities are hereby repealed.

Sec. 2. That of the reserve now required by law to be kept in lawful money by national banking associations in central reserve cities not less than one-half shall hereafter be held in gold or gold certificates.

Sec. 3. That all laws and parts of laws whereby national bank examiners are now paid fees for examination of banks are hereby repealed, and from and after the date upon which this act shall go into effect national bank examiners shall receive a salary of not less than three thousand nor more than five thousand dollars per annum each, to be fixed in each case by the Comptroller of the Currency, due regard being had to the work to be performed by each, and each examiner, as a further compensation, shall receive his actual expenses while engaged in the discharge of his duties, the said salary and expenses to be paid out of the fund realized under existing law by the duty on circulation.

Sec. 4. That the total liabilities of any association, of any person, or of any company, corporation, or firm for money borrowed, including in the liabilities of a company or firm the liabilities of the several members thereof, shall at no time exceed one-tenth part of the amount of the capital stock of such association actually paid in and unimpaired and one-tenth part of its unimpaired surplus fund: Provided, however, That the total of such liabilities shall in no event exceed 30 per cent of the capital stock of the association. But the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values and the discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same shall not be considered as money borrowed. Any violation of this provision shall be a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, the offending bank shall be subject to a penalty of not less than the difference between the amount permitted by this provision to be loaned to any one person and the amount actually loaned, to be recovered in a court of competent jurisdiction, and, furthermore, upon conviction, any director of a bank who has knowingly voted to make a loan in violation of this provision and any officer of any bank who shall knowingly make such a loan shall be subject to a fine of not less than $1,000 or to imprisonment for not less than thirty days, or both.

Sec. 5. That no national banking association shall hereafter make loans which in the aggregate shall amount to more than seven times the aggregate amount of its paid-up capital plus its unimpaired surplus. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall be a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, the offending bank, its directors or officers, knowingly violating this provision, shall be subject to the penalty provided in the preceding section.

Sec. 6. That any national banking association may hereafter keep 50 per cent of the reserve now required to be kept by it in United States bonds and in bonds of any State or municipal bonds such as are hereinafter described, not over one-half in amount to be in State bonds or any legally authorized bonds issued for municipal purposes by any city or county in the United States which have been at or above par for six years preceding the date of their deposit and which municipality has been in existence as a city or county for a period of ten years and which during said ten years has not defaulted in the payment of any part of either principal or interest of any funded debt authorized to be contracted by it and whose net indebtedness does not exceed 18 per cent of the valuation of taxable property therein, to be ascertained by taking the average valuation of property for the assessment of taxes for the five years preceding the date of the offering of said bonds as security. Before any institution can procure any of the emergency currency notes herein provided for upon such above-described municipal bonds as security the person or institution offering such bonds shall accompany them by the written opinion, or a certified copy of the written opinion, of the attorney-general of the State of such city or county that the bonds so offered are legally issued and are a valid subsisting obligation against the city or county issuing the same. These bonds thus held as 50 per cent of a bank's reserves are hereby designated as interconvertible bonds.

Sec. 7. That immediately after the passage of this act the Comptroller of the Currency shall address a communication to each national bank then in operation, inclosing a copy of this act, inquiring if the bank will accept the provisions thereof, and all communications of banks in reply to such inquiries shall be filed and preserved by the Comptroller of the Currency as a part of the archives of his office. The banks which accept the provisions of this act shall be held and bound thereby, and their liabilities may be enforced by the Comptroller of the Currency: Provided, That the Comptroller of the Currency shall also address a like communication to each State bank, savings bank, and trust company then in operation, which upon accepting the provisions of this act shall submit to the same examinations and make the same reports to the Comptroller of the Currency as are now provided by law for national banking associations.

Sec. 8. That for the purpose of providing an emergency currency any bank holding interconvertible bonds as a part of its reserves may at any time deposit the same in the nearest United States subtreasury and obtain in lieu of them "United States emergency Treasury notes." The notes issued to any national banking association, State bank, savings bank, or trust company under the provisions of this act shall be considered as a loan to such institution, which loan shall bear interest as hereinafter provided, payable in lawful money of the United States. The interest to be paid upon said United States emergency currency notes shall be at the rate of one-eighth of 1 per cent per month for the first four months, or any fractional part thereof, and one-half of 1 per cent per month for the second four months, or any fractional part thereof, and 1 per cent per month thereafter. Whenever any bank, having taken out the above-described "United States emergency currency notes" upon the deposit of their "interconvertible bonds," as herein defined, shall repay to the Treasury of the United States the amount thus taken out, or any part thereof, in any form of lawful money of the United States—not "United States emergency currency notes"—the amount thus repaid shall be set aside as a special fund not to be used in the general expenditures of the Government, or otherwise, except for the purpose of redeeming the "United States emergency currency notes" when they shall come into the Treasury or be presented for payment. Whenever any bank, having taken out "United States emergency currency notes" upon the deposit of interconvertible bonds, as herein defined, shall repay the same, in whole or in part, in "United States emergency currency notes," the said notes shall be canceled and destroyed.

Sec. 9. That any banking association organized and existing under the laws of any State may avail itself of the privileges and benefits of sections 7 and 8 of this act by complying with the provisions thereof under such rules and regulations, consistent with the provisions of this act, as may be prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 10. That the emergency currency notes provided for in this act shall be a full legal tender for all debts, private and public, and shall conform in size, color, and wording thereon, as nearly as practicable, to the present United States Treasury notes, except each note shall have printed on the face thereof the words: "This note is secured by deposit of bonds with the Treasurer of the United States."

Sec. 11. That it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 1st day of July, on the 1st day of October, on the 1st day of January, and on the 1st day of April of each year, after thirty days' previous notice of his purpose, to receive and open sealed bids from national and State banks applying to receive deposits (on call) of such surplus moneys in the United States Treasury as he may contemplate depositing with banks, and to award deposits to bidding banks as hereinafter provided. That each bid to receive deposit of any of said funds shall state the amount of money to be applied for to be deposited with the bank making the bid, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall award deposits, in amounts not greater than the amounts applied for and not greater than other provisions of this act prescribe, to the banks offering the highest rate of interest in the order of their respective bids. Where two or more banks offer the same rate of interest, that rate being higher than the rate offered by any other bank, and the amounts applied for by all banks shall exceed the total of surplus funds in the Treasury to be deposited, deposits shall be awarded proportionately to each of said highest bidding banks in the proportion which the total amount of surplus funds in the Treasury bears to the total of amounts applied for by said highest bidding banks: Provided, That no offer by any bank to take on deposit an amount less than $12,500 nor an amount above 50 per cent of the paid-up capital stock of the bidding bank shall be considered by the Secretary of the Treasury, nor shall any bid by any syndicate of banks or combination of banks be considered or received by him. Furthermore, the Secretary of the Treasury in making deposits shall, as far as practicable—interest rates of bids being equal—distribute deposits among the States in proportion to population. The Secretary of the Treasury shall not make, authorize, nor permit any deposit of United States Government funds in any bank which shall not previously to said deposit have complied with the provisions of this act, as well as all existing laws and lawful regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, governing security to be given for repayment of funds deposited with banks on demand. All surplus moneys of the United States now permitted by law to be left in national depositories on call shall hereafter bear a rate of interest not less than 2 per cent per annum and not more than 10 per cent per annum.

Sec. 12. That whenever any bank is made a depository to receive deposits of surplus funds of the United States it shall be required, prior to the deposit of said funds by the Government, to deposit in the Treasury of the United States at Washington, or in some convenient subtreasury of the United States designated by the Comptroller of the Currency, either United States bonds or the bonds of some State of the United States, or municipal bonds such as are described in section 6 of this act and subject to the conditions therein prescribed, which bonds shall be deposited in conformity with the provisions of this act and according to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Sec. 13. That there shall be levied a semiannual assessment of one-sixteenth of 1 per cent upon the average six preceding months' deposits of all such banks, banking associations, and associations doing a banking business as are hereafter designated in this section; this assessment of one-sixteenth of 1 per cent to be payable at times and in manner and the average deposits of each bank as a basis of assessment to be determined by rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The assessment herein prescribed is to continue until the sum of $15,000,000 has been accumulated and set aside in the Treasury of the United States in trust for the purposes hereinafter designated, the said assessment to be not further levied and to become not further collectible whenever, upon ascertainment by the Secretary of the Treasury, the said sum of $15,000,000 has been attained: Provided, however, That whenever the amount of said fund shall fall below $15,000,000, then said assessment shall again become operative, payable, and collectible in each and every case until in each case the said sum shall be restored to the amount of $15,000,000. The sum of $15,000,000 herein provided to be accumulated and held in the Treasury of the United States is to be held for the sole purpose of paying depositors in the banks whose deposits are hereby assessed when, after the exhaustion of the assets of any failed bank, there remains any balance due depositors unpaid. The assessment herein provided for shall be levied only upon such banks, banking associations, and associations doing a banking business, whether under Federal or State charter, as shall signify to the Secretary of the Treasury their willingness to be so assessed and their desire that their depositors shall become beneficiaries of the fund so accumulated. Any such bank, banking association, or association doing a banking business chartered by the laws of any State shall become subject to this assessment and its depositors shall become beneficiaries of the depositors' indemnity or insurance fund thus accumulated and provided for upon its complying with the provisions of this section and other sections by indicating to the Secretary of the Treasury its willingness to be so assessed, by its paying the assessments and continuing to pay the same, and by its submitting to such examinations by national-bank examiners as are now prescribed for national banks: Provided, however, That the Government of the United States shall not, under this section, acquire the right to close or to put into the hands of a receiver or otherwise to penalize any State bank, banking association, or association doing a banking business under a State charter, except that whenever a report shall be made by a national-bank examiner to the Comptroller of the Treasury which shows that if the State bank or banking association operating under the charter of a State justify the closing or appointment of a receiver if the said bank had been a national bank, or which shows that the said State banking institution is reported by the State examiner as failing to comply with the laws of the State of its charter, then the said State bank, banking association, or association doing a banking business under the charter of a State and any owners of future deposits in said bank shall cease thereafter to be beneficiaries of the depositors' indemnity or insurance fund hereby provided to be accumulated, unless the said bank shall within ten days, under the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury, restore itself to a sound condition and be publicly reported by him to have done so: Provided further, That in the event any such bank shall fail or refuse to pay the assessment herein provided for within ten days after the notice of its assessment by the Comptroller of the Currency such bank shall be denied the benefits of the deposit guarantee fund provided for herein, except to the extent of the benefit it or its depositors may have become entitled to at the time of its failure to pay said tax. The necessary expenses incident to the enforcement of section 13 of this act shall be paid out of the proceeds of the assets of such failed banks.

Sec. 14. That any officer or director of any national bank who shall negotiate or make a loan where the purpose of the loan is a stock or produce gambling purpose, and that purpose is known to him or them, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine equal to the amount of the loan so unlawfully made and negotiated or shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than thirty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 15. That this act shall go into effect from and after the 1st day of July succeeding its passage and approval.

During the reading,

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rule provides that at 5 o'clock the vote shall be taken without delay, I submit that this is delay and purely dilatory. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. COCKRAN. Is a harlequinade not delay?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

[The Clerk proceeded with and finished the reading of the bill.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on substituting the bill just read, H. R. 16730, for the bill H. R. 21871.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 6, nays 231, answered "present" 95, not voting 56, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. REEDER with Mr. SMITH of Texas.

Mr. GRONNA with Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi.

On this vote:

Mr. LOUD (in favor of) with Mr. PADGETT (against).

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER (in favor of) with Mr. SPARKMAN (against).

Mr. HARDING (in favor of) with Mr. ASHBROOK (against).

Mr. OLCOTT (in favor of) with Mr. HARRISON (against).

Mr. HAGGOTT. Mr. Speaker, on the roll call I voted "yea." I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN]. I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. HAGGOTT was called, and he answered "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Speaker, I agreed to see that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] was paired or pair with him myself. I voted to amend the bill. His pair came in and voted "no." I wish to be recorded as "present" and paired with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] on that vote.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to withdraw his vote on the substitute and be recorded as "present," and the pair with the gentleman from Mississippi will be noted. The Chair hears no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On May 13, 1908:

H. R. 1589. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 20471. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

STREET RAILWAY IN PONCE, PORTO RICO.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with section 32 of an act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and section 2 of the joint resolution amending said act, approved May 1, 1900, I transmit herewith copy of an ordinance amending an ordinance passed by the executive council of Porto Rico, April 19, 1907, entitled "An ordinance supplementary to an ordinance entitled: 'A franchise granting to W. S. H. Lothrop, his heirs, successors, and assigns, the right to construct and operate an electric street railway in certain streets in the city of Ponce and between the city of Ponce and the plaza thereof,' passed by the executive council on the 27th day of February, 1901."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 14, 1908.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6966. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.

The message also announced that Mr. SCOTT and Mr. TALLAFERRO were excused from further service as conferees on the bill (H. R. 16268) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, and that the Vice-President had appointed Mr. SMOOT and Mr. TELLER in their places.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3810. An act for the relief of Howard B. Carpenter—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4435. An act for the relief of George Q. Allen—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 5879. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Jonesboro, Ark.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 7091. An act to grant to the State of Mississippi certain lands for the use of the common schools of that State—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 6966. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 19541. An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota; and

H. R. 17296. An act providing for the restoration of the motto "In God we trust" on certain denominations of the gold and silver coins of the United States.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 514. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on May 13, 1908, they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 20784. An act to authorize aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4063. An act for the widening of Benning road, and for other purposes;

H. R. 20471. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 3610. An act granting a pension to James M. Fitch.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for ten days on account of important business.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess until 11.30 a. m. to-morrow.

The question was taken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 170, nays 89, answered "present" 8, not voting 120, as follows:

Padden and others, and James Guest and others, for amendment proposed by American Federation of Labor conference to the Sherman antitrust law, for the Pearre bill, the employers' liability bill, and the extension of the national eight-hour law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. YOUNG: Petition of working people of the Twelfth Congressional District of Michigan, for the protection, restoration, and defense of the natural and inherent rights of our people and for amendment to Sherman antitrust law, and for Pearre bill, employers' liability bill, and eight-hour law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 15, 1908.

Prayer by Rev. ULYSSES G. B. PIERCE, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 421. An act to pay allottees the amount paid into the Treasury of the United States on account of the sale, cutting, or removal of timber from, or damages to, lands allotted to them, and to appropriate money for the payment thereof;

H. R. 21410. An act granting condemned ordnance to certain institutions; and

H. R. 21871. An act to amend the national banking laws.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 17296) providing for the restoration of the motto "In God we trust" on certain denominations of the gold and silver coins of the United States, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON TUBERCULOSIS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a letter on a matter of great concern to the American people, which I will ask to have read. I have no suggestions to make concerning it, but I think it well to have it read so that the Senate may understand about the matter and that it may go in the Record for further consideration. I will ask that the Secretary read the letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read in part the letter, which is, entire, as follows:

THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON TUBERCULOSIS,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1908.

Senator JACOB GALLINGER, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The International Congress on Tuberculosis is to meet in Washington this year from September 21 to October 12, inclusive. From present outlook it will be the most important event in the interest of public health and wealth that the world has seen. England has appointed a committee of nearly 300 of its most prominent citizens to participate, among them such men as Osier, Albutt, Sir Thomas Barlow, Right Hon. Lord James Blyth, Sir Lauder Brunton, Sir W. Selby Church, Sir Malcolm Morris, the Countess of Aberdeen, and the Lord Provost of Glasgow. France has appointed an equally large committee, with such men on it as Ex-President Loubet, Professors Bouchard and Landouzy, Senator Leon Bourgeois, Senator Labbé, and Director Mesureur. Germany will participate with such men as Von Behring, Nietner, Baginsky, Von Leyden, and Orth. Every civilized country of the world is preparing to participate and has organized for this purpose with its foremost men on its committee. We now are confronted with the problem of properly housing this gigantic gathering and exposition. We not only will have to provide meeting rooms for seven sections of from 300 to 1,000 people each, but we will have to house an exhibit which to the scientific and philanthropic world is what a world's fair is to the commercial world. Every country will participate in this exhibit. Our local committee in Washington has reported that there is no building in Washington outside of Government buildings large enough to house the congress properly. We accordingly have appealed to Congress to give us the use of the Capitol and the Congressional Office Building for housing the congress. These buildings would house the congress creditably to our country and in some measure upon the plane established by other countries.

The congress was organized in Paris in 1898, it met again in Naples in 1899, in Berlin in 1900, in London in 1901, and a second time in Paris in 1905. The meeting in Berlin had between two and three thousand members. In London an immense gathering was expected, and St. James Hall was given for its use. In Paris a still larger gathering was looked for, and the French Republic gave the use of the Grand Palais. The congress on this occasion was the guest of the French Government, and President Loubet presided at the initial meeting. When we invited the congress to Washington, assent was given with tremendous applause and the hope was expressed that this Washington meeting would be the greatest and most fruitful that the world had yet seen. The reputation of our country for doing things on a large scale brings with it obligations which we can not ignore. We must at least do as well as other countries have done, and the world expects that we will do better. Nothing short of the Capitol and the Congressional Office Building will come up to the housing given by England and France.

The question has been asked why this congress has been invited to Washington. The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, a representative body of citizens of our country, deeply interested in the crusade against tuberculosis, felt that the time has come when the United States should claim its logical place in the world campaign against the white plague and should be permitted to profit by the knowledge and experience of the rest of the world in this warfare. All of the first ruling countries had been hosts to this congress, and the United States had been a guest to each. How could we longer resist the logic of events without defaulting among nations?

Other large cities in our country stood ready not only to house the Congress, but to give it a setting such as had never been given anywhere in the world. We felt, however, that it would be an insult to our National Government to take this congress anywhere in our country except our capital. We felt certain that the United States Congress would do all that might be necessary to give this congress a setting commensurate with its importance and the rank of our country among nations.

The committee has raised a fund of upward of $60,000 from public-spirited citizens for organizing the congress and getting up the exhibit. We expect to bring this amount up to $100,000. Were it physically possible for us to supply proper housing, we would do so, and we are confident that we could raise the money for this purpose. As matters stand adequate housing is only possible through Congress, because there are no buildings in Washington outside of Government buildings big enough and dignified enough for the purpose. I therefore appeal to you to help us.

Trusting that we may have your cooperation, I remain,
Very truly, yours,

LAWRENCE F. FLICK.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I will ask simply to have the remainder of this interesting letter printed in the Record. It is a matter of extreme importance. I do not feel at all sure that what is asked could possibly be granted, but it is certain that some liberal provision ought to be made by Congress for taking care of this great gathering. Men of distinguished scientific attainments will come from all parts of the world. It seems that England has appointed nearly 300 of its most prominent citizens to come here and participate in this international congress. I ask simply that the remainder of the letter be printed in the Record.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the entire letter will be printed in the Record, and it will lie on the table.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the financial bill just received from the House be laid before the Senate for reference.

H. R. 21871, an act to amend the national banking laws, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask what disposition was made of the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Before the reference is made, I should like to say a word on the subject.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous that we should get an hour for the consideration of the Calendar, by unanimous consent, to dispose of a great many bills there in which many Senators are interested. This bill ought to go to the Committee on Finance at once, but if the Senator is going to debate it I will withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. What is the pending order now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words in regard to this bill. I trust that the Committee on Finance will present the bill with certain amendments which I shall suggest briefly.

One is an amendment requiring that national banks shall keep at least three-fourths of their reserves in their bank vaults, the change, however, to be made gradually, within a period of five years, under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency.

I also hope that the committee will submit another amendment, and that is one preventing national banks from loaning their depositors' money to an amount exceeding five times their capital and surplus, and that provision shall be made also for a gradual change in this respect, under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency, within a period of five years, the purpose of the gradual change being not to accomplish an immediate dislocation in the relation between the loans of the banks and their capital and surplus, but to accomplish the reform gradually.

I also trust that an amendment will be offered by the committee providing that State banks may become members of these clearing-house associations, conditioned upon their complying with the requirements of the national-bank act in these provisions relating to the relations of reserves to deposits and bank loans to capital.

I also trust that the committee will offer an amendment that the presidents of the clearing-house associations shall meet annually and select a banking commission of nine men, each representing a section of the country corresponding to the judicial circuits, who shall sit permanently at Washington as an advisory commission to the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, and to Congress, with a view to considering changes in the banking law and making recommendations regarding interstate and international exchange, and also with a view of bringing the Treasury Department into immediate contact with the selected representative of each section of the country, so that we shall have at Washington the sentiment of each section represented in such a commission, instead of compelling the Secretary of the Treasury, as heretofore, to go to one place, New York, for counsel and advice regarding the financial situation.

Now, if the Finance Committee will present brief amendments in this direction—requiring changes in reserves to be gradually brought about within a period of five years; providing that the amount of the capital and surplus and the bank loans shall be fixed in a certain relation, the change to be accomplished in five years; providing that the State banks shall become members of these clearing-house associations upon the condition that they shall subject themselves to the same rules relating to reserves and to bank loans, and then establishing a banking commission at Washington representing the best thought of the banking sentiment in each section and in direct contact with Congress and the Executive in matters of advice and counsel—it seems to me that it will largely perfect this bill and to a very large extent do away with the necessity for the currency commission which it is proposed to create.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Indiana Branch of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, of Indianapolis, Ind., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation permitting the construction of a dam for power or other purposes in White River at or near Williams, in that State, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens and labor organizations of Seattle, Wash., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the American Water Works Association, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the taking of the census of the water powers of the United States by the Census Bureau, which was referred to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of sundry citizens and labor organizations of Taylorville and Urbana, in the State of Illinois, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRYE presented sundry petitions of citizens and labor organizations of Madison, Me., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Central Labor Union, American Federation of Labor, of Newport, R. I., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT presented petitions of sundry citizens and labor organizations of New York City and Yonkers, in the State of New York, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the National Convention for the Unemployed, of New York City, N. Y., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of national roadways and for the deepening and improving of the waterways of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rock Springs, Wyo., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of Corry Council, No. 425, Order of Knights of Columbus, of Corry, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation making October 12, the anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, a national holiday, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Frackville Grange, No. 1225, Patrons of Husbandry, of Frackville, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called "McHenry bill," providing for the safety of deposits in all banks, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of East Downingtown, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE presented petitions of sundry citizens and labor organizations of Bangor and Millinocket, in the State of Maine, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to promote Rear-Admiral Robley D. Evans to the grade of vice-admiral, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the San Joaquin Building Trades Council, of Stockton, Cal., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PILES presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Seattle and Montesano, in the State of Washington, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit Sunday banking in post-offices in the handling of money orders and registered letters, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens and labor organizations of Seattle and Bellingham, in the State of Washington, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also (for Mr. ANKENY) presented a petition of the Central Labor Council, American Federation of Labor, of Seattle, Wash., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Kearney, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation to authorize the Secretary of War to investigate and report a plan for the preservation of Old Fort Kearney, in that State, as historical ground, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TRADE WITH THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have here a paper touching trade with the Philippines in sugar and tobacco, sent to me with the request that I should put it in the Record. In my judgment it should not go in the Record; it is cheaper and better to publish it as a document. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that it may be published as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEMORIAL TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. WETMORE. I am directed by the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7110) to aid in building a memorial to Abraham Lincoln, on the site of the Lincoln birthplace, in Kentucky, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 660) thereon. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the bill will be considered and passed at this time.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the expenditure of $50,000 under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the express purpose, and no other, of aiding in the building of a suitable memorial upon the farm, in the State of Kentucky, upon which Abraham Lincoln was born, said memorial to be in process of construction February 12, 1900, the centennial of Abraham Lincoln's birth. But authorization of expenditure is made upon the express condition that the Lincoln Farm Association of the State of New York shall first have raised the sum of $150,000, used, or to be used, for the purchase of the farm, building the memorial, caring for the same, and acquiring relics characteristic of the life of the period and locality in which Lincoln was born.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, when the routine morning business is ended I propose to ask the Senate, for the convenience of a great many Senators, to proceed to the consideration, under Rule VIII, of bills on the Calendar to be passed by unanimous consent.

For several days all bills have been held up by the appropriation and other bills. A great many Senators are interested in bills on the Calendar, and half an hour or an hour spent in taking up only those bills that will pass by unanimous consent will relieve a great many Senators. As soon as the morning business is over I shall make the request. I will not interfere now with the regular order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Printing, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $800 to pay A. J. Halford for compiling, editing, and indexing the third edition of the Congressional Directory, first session, Sixtieth Congress, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6087) authorizing the extension of P. Volta, Q, and Dent streets NW., reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PILES, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 6840) to amend the laws concerning transportation between ports of the Territory of Hawaii and other ports of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 661) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HALE. There are Senators who desire to look at that bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire, on the part of the minority of the committee, to submit a minority report.

Mr. HALE. Yes; there is a minority report. Of course it will go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California submits the views of the minority. The bill will go to the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (H. R. 21871) to amend the national banking law, with a recommendation to strike out all after the enacting clause and to substitute the bill which I send to the desk. I will say that this is a unanimous report of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply in this connection wish to say that the report is unanimous in the sense that I very much prefer the bill reported by the Senate committee as against the bill which passed the House. In that sense it is unanimous.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21003) fixing the compensation of certain officials in the customs service, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6019) to establish a home for feeble-minded, imbecile, and idiotic children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 662) thereon.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 88) to provide for an accounting of certain funds held in trust for the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 4290) providing for the extension of time within which purchasers of lands in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache reservations and the Fort Sill Wood Reservation may make payment;

A bill (S. 3995) extending time of payment on town-site lots in that part of Oklahoma formerly comprising the Indian Territory;

A bill (S. 6720) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 6721) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

He also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5310) to authorize the Kaw tribe of Indians residing in the State of Oklahoma to bring suit in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4292) for the relief of Clarence W. Turner, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. GOBE on the 8th instant, proposing to appropriate $214,335.25 to pay the unpaid expenses of the constitutional convention of Oklahoma, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, submitted a report (No. 663) thereon, and moved that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

MENOMINEE INDIAN RESERVATION, WIS.

Mr. CLAPP. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report a joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on the Menominee Indian Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin," approved March 28, 1908, and I ask for its present consideration. It is to perfect an act that has already passed at this session, and this joint resolution is reported at the request of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is unable to be present.

Mr. HALE. It will give rise to no debate?

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, to no debate.

The joint resolution (S. R. 87) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on the Menominee Indian Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin," approved March 28, 1908, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act of Congress approved March 28, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on the Menominee Indian Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin," be, and the same is hereby, amended to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to manufacture into lumber any logs now remaining on hand which have heretofore been cut under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the cutting, sawing into lumber, and sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Menominee tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin," approved June 28, 1906, or under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Menominee tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin," approved June 12, 1890, or to dispose of the same in accordance with the provisions of either or both of the two acts of Congress last aforesaid.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 7120) granting a pension to Lettie A. Dunn, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DIXON introduced a bill (S. 7121) for the relief of the estate of James W. Mardis, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRAZIER submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GAMBLE presented an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEMENWAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORE submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEMENWAY submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCCREARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

THE THIRTEENTH CENSUS.

Mr. BURKETT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16054) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, which was referred to the Committee on the Census and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—WILLIAM HARRINGTON.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of William Harrington, accompanying Senate bill 690, Sixtieth Congress, first session, subject to the provision of clause 2 of Rule XXX.

OPENING OF INDIAN ROLLS.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask to have printed as a document a hearing before the Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate, on the bill (S. 4736) extending the provisions of an act approved February 8, 1901, entitled "An act amending an act of August 15, 1904, entitled 'An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaties and stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes,'" to any person claiming any right in the common property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians or tribes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENROLLMENT OF OSAGE INDIANS.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask to have printed as a document a hearing before the Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate, on joint resolution No. 70, for the enrollment of certain persons as members of the Osage tribe of Indians, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SPECIAL PARCELS POST.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record a letter from the Postmaster-General relating to the post-office appropriation bill, which I omitted to have inserted when that bill was up for consideration.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 11, 1908.

MY DEAR SENATOR: A statement of the postal receipts for March, 1908, shows a decrease of $260,957, or 3.11 per cent, at the largest fifty post-offices. The percentages of increase or decrease in the postal receipts at fifty of the principal post-offices during the five months preceding March last, as compared with the corresponding months the previous year, are: October, 3.80 per cent increase; November, 0.17 per cent decrease; December, 6.14 per cent increase; January, 1.59 per cent decrease; February, 4.66 per cent increase.

I am convinced that the establishment of a special local parcel post on rural routes would tend to wipe out the postal deficit, and would eventually make the rural free delivery self-sustaining, besides being a boon to the farmer and retail country merchant. There are now in operation more than 39,000 rural routes, serving a population of about 15,000,000 people; and should an average of 50 pounds of merchandise be carried on each trip throughout the year it is estimated that about $15,000,000 would be realized, and the net return to the Government would be more than sufficient to equal the deficit. I feel that from an administrative and business view point it is most desirable that such legislation be enacted. However, as this seems impossible at this session of Congress, I urgently recommend that the Postmaster-General be given authority to conduct an experimental parcel post on rural routes, the same as was done originally with rural delivery.

On December 19, 1907, Mr. LAFFAN, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill in the House providing for the establishment of a parcels-post system in York and Adams counties, Pa. I urge that the principal of this bill be proposed as an amendment to the post-office appropriation bill—with the exception that the Post-Office Department will not require any appropriation for the purpose.

I call your attention to the following presentations concerning the advantages of a special local parcels post confined to rural-delivery routes:

The Department favors the establishment of this special service because of its ability to render it with great advantage to the farmer, the country merchant, and other patrons of the routes, as the necessary machinery (over 39,000 routes now regularly covered by rural carriers) is in operation. There are some 15,000,000 people living on these routes, which shows the vast possibilities of the rural service. The increased cancellations would automatically advance the salaries of postmasters of the fourth class, and the remaining revenue would be clear gain.

The history and advantages of the rural delivery should be understood by our people. There is a feeling in many quarters that it is an extravagance and an unnecessary drain upon the postal revenues. The first rural route was established in the latter part of 1896, $14,840 being expended for rural delivery during that fiscal year. At that time the postal deficit was $11,411,779. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, the expenditures for rural delivery aggregated $26,671,699, while the postal deficit showed a decrease, as compared with 1897, of $4,800,000, the deficit amounting to $8,653,282. This would seem to show that, while the expense incurred for maintaining rural delivery is great, yet the rural delivery has been instrumental in increasing the general postal receipts. However, its benefits to our people can not be measured in dollars and cents.

That a local parcels post on rural routes would be of material advantage to the local retail merchant in competition with mail-order houses is seen at once, when it is pointed out that the latter is obliged to pay 44 cents for sending a 4-pound package to a rural-route patron, as against a cost of 25 cents to the local storekeeper for sending an 11-pound package to the rural-route patron.

Letters and petitions for this extension of the parcels post are being received from all sections of the country. Many commercial bodies formerly opposed to any action of this kind are on record as being heartily in favor of it.

On the other hand, objections have been raised to the measures the Department is advocating. Although no sound argument has been advanced in opposition, the contentions which have been made are not without interest. I mention the more important of them, at the same time giving the replies which they have elicited.

The claim that the special local rate recommended for the parcels post on rural routes would eventually be extended to include the entire postal service has been given considerable publicity. The impossibility of this becomes apparent when attention is directed to the cost of railroad transportation, which has no part in the former service. About $45,000,000 were paid last year for mail transportation and about $6,000,000 for postal cars.

Others have said that large mail-order houses would under the proposed law utilize the special parcels post on rural routes through agents, to the great disadvantage of the country merchant, first assembling their orders and dispatching them by express or freight to suitable distributing points. The Department has recommended provisions which will prevent any such use of the routes, namely:

"Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be taken as authorizing the acceptance or delivery at such special rates of postage of any parcel offered by any person acting as agent or representative, upon commission or otherwise, for any person or company not resident on such rural delivery route: And provided further, That only such parcels shall be received for delivery at the special rates of postage as are offered by bona fide merchants or dealers whose regular places of business are on such rural delivery routes or the town from which the route or routes emanate, in the ordinary and regular course of their business, and by residents on such routes in their individual capacity."

It should be remembered, too, that even in the absence of a specific prohibition of this nature, any systematic attempt upon the part of a mail-order house to thus distribute its wares would necessitate the employment of many thousands of local representatives. The catalogues of these concerns indicate in no uncertain way that they attribute their success in large measure to their low selling expense, and that the absence of any sort of agents is the principal feature of their argument in accounting for the supposedly low prices of their goods.

The cry of "class legislation" has been raised. There is, of course, no discrimination involved, for all who can be reached by rural carriers will be accommodated. It would be as reasonable to decry the laws which permit the delivery of mail to patrons living on rural routes while persons differently situated are obliged to make a trip to a near-by post-office to obtain their letters.

With the adoption of new conveniences of life by urban residents and the ever-increasing attractions of the city, especially potent in their influence upon the younger generation, the importance of affording farmers and ruralites generally every legitimate advantage becomes more and more apparent. The free rural delivery has improved materially and intellectually the life of great numbers of these people. Is it too much to ask that the Department shall make a further use of this important system, a use which, while adding appreciably to the postal revenues, will directly and vitally benefit every man, woman, and child within reach of a rural route? The countryman would have the necessities of life delivered at his gate at an average cost of 2 cents a pound, thereby facilitating and increasing consumption. This would mean augmentation of the trade of thousands of country merchants. The commercial traveler should appreciate the advantages of this system. It would increase his orders because the country merchant buys from the jobber or the wholesaler. Every component part of our commercial system would feel the effects of an increased prosperity.

It would inevitably tend toward the improvement of the roads. Better roads and improved postal facilities in the rural districts would result in increased values of farm lands. The rural service as now organized has accomplished something in this direction. Its enlargement will add to the good attained.

Believe me, faithfully, yours,

G. V. L. MEYER.

Hon. ROSES PENROSE,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads,
United States Senate.

PROPOSED FINANCIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I submit a resolution, which I ask to have inserted in the Record and then laid upon the table. I shall address the Senate at some future day upon the subject.

The resolution was ordered to be printed in the Record and to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Finance Committee be instructed to report amendments to House bill No. 21871, as follows:

First. An amendment providing that three-fourths of the reserves in reserve city and country banks shall be kept in their vaults, the change to be made gradually within a period of five years, under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Second. An amendment providing that no bank shall make loans of its depositors' money to an amount exceeding five times its capital and surplus, the change to be made gradually within a period of five years, under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Third. An amendment permitting State commercial banks to become members of national clearing-house associations, provided they submit to the regulations of the national-bank act regarding their capital and reserves and subject themselves to examination under the national-bank act.

Fourth. An amendment providing a method by which clearing-house associations may avail themselves, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the use of additional silver as a limited legal tender for debts not exceeding $50, with a view to substituting such silver, or the certificates representing it for full legal-tender money, gold, or United States notes, now in circulation and outside of bank reserves, in order to increase the amount of gold and full legal-tender notes in such reserves as a basis for bank credits, the amendment to limit the amount of such issue of silver.

Fifth. An amendment providing that the presidents of the clearing-house associations shall meet annually in Washington and shall select nine commissioners, one from each of the judicial circuits of the United States, who shall represent them at Washington as members of a banking commission, of which the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be, respectively, the chairman and secretary; the duties of the commission to be advisory to the President, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to Congress; and such commission to be charged with the duty of considering and recommending changes in the banking act and methods for promoting and improving interstate and international exchange.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I shall call up the resolution for discussion hereafter.

SALARIES OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURT JUDGES.

Mr. DEPEW. I move that 2,000 copies of Senate bill 6973, increasing the salaries of the circuit and district court judges of the United States, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF OWNERS OF PATENTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 7653) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to provide additional protection for owners of patents of the United States, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. KNOX. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4919 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"And whenever an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States shall hereafter be used by the United States, without license of the owner thereof, such owner may recover reasonable compensation for such use by suit in the Court of Claims: Provided, however, That in any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, which might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, as set forth in Title LX of the Revised Statutes, or otherwise."

Mr. KNOX. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. A similar bill passed the Senate at the last session. I reported it from the Committee on Patents. It has passed the House in the exact form in which the Senate passed it at the last session.

The object of the bill is to give the owners of letters patent in the United States the right to recover reasonable compensation when their patents are used by the United States without their consent or authority. Strangely enough, under the law, although a patent is property, and has so been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, and is property which can not be taken by an individual under the fifth amendment without compensation, yet the Supreme Court has held that if the United States uses a patent without the license or authority of the patentee no action can be maintained against the United States unless it has agreed to pay for the use. It is to remedy that inequity that the bill has been introduced. I may state that it is wholly prospective in its operation. It has no reference at all to any use the Government may have made of a patent in the past.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that it has no retroactive effect.

Mr. KNOX. It has no retroactive effect.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 421. An act to pay allottees the amount paid into the Treasury of the United States on account of the sale, cutting, or removal of timber from, or damages to, lands allotted to them, and to appropriate money for the payment thereof was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 21410. An act granting condemned ordnance to certain institutions was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills upon the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNTER. I should like to make an inquiry. If this order is made and an objection is made to the consideration of a bill when it is reached on the Calendar, can the Senate order that it be taken up for consideration, notwithstanding the objection?

Mr. HALE. Not under the agreement I propose.

Mr. PAYNTER. I object, then, if that is the proposition.

Mr. HALE. If I may make a suggestion, the Senator is objecting to a thing that will be for the convenience of more than half of the Senate.

Mr. PAYNTER. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I do not wish to have the unanimous-consent agreement foreclose the right to make a motion to take up a bill during the consideration of unobjected cases.

Mr. HALE. If that is to be resorted to there is no object in making the agreement. The proposition is to pass bills to which there is no objection. I suppose that more than fifty Senators are interested in such bills. The object of my suggestion is to avoid proceeding by motion to take up a bill, because under those circumstances my suggestion would have no force.

If Senators object to this arrangement, then nothing will be done on the Calendar except to consume the time with one or two cases. I am proposing to do what has always been done toward the close of a session, to relieve Senators who have bills upon the Calendar to which there is no objection.

Therefore my proposition is that the Senate shall proceed by unanimous consent to the consideration of unobjected cases under Rule VIII. If any Senator can stop that by moving to proceed to the consideration of a bill, we may consume the time on one or two cases on the Calendar. Otherwise, Mr. President, in an hour we will pass fifty cases to which nobody has any objection. Any Senator is left entirely free to object to any bill that is reached, and it must go over.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator to limit the time until 2 o'clock, then.

Mr. HALE. I did not fix any time because I was entirely willing to leave that to the discretion of the Senate. The Senate can at any time take up any other business.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado will state his question of order.

Mr. TELLER. Rule VIII provides that—

At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock; and bills and resolutions that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question—

And so forth.

I understand that that business comes up in a regular way, and it does not need any motion or any agreement.

Mr. HALE. Except that under the rule any Senator, when an objection is made to a bill that is reached on the Calendar, may move to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Then the whole time may be taken up with that bill. My proposition is to avoid that very thing by considering only unobjected cases on the Calendar under Rule VIII, and that the moment a case is objected to it retains its place on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. I did not understand that that was the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. HALE. That is my object.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I shall have no objection to fixing any reasonable time during the day for the consideration of unobjected cases, but I do not wish to be understood as consenting to a unanimous-consent agreement which will deprive any Senator of the privilege he otherwise would enjoy of moving to proceed to the consideration of any measure.

Mr. HALE. My proposition does not affect anything that occurs afterwards. I will ask that we proceed for one hour, and in that time we will pass any number of bills.

Mr. McLAURIN. Say, 2 o'clock.

Mr. PAYNTER. I suggest until 2 o'clock.

Mr. HALE. Very well, I will say until 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed until the hour of 2 o'clock with the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker acts, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. That will have to go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

NATIONAL FORESTS.

The bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. Let that go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes over at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

JAMES W. KINGON.

The bill (S. 1577) for the relief of Sergt. James W. Kingon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, notwithstanding the proceedings, findings, and sentence of the general court-martial convened pursuant to Special Orders, No. 118, extract, June 28, 1865, issued by command of Brevet Brig. Gen. E. O. Dyke, headquarters Second Division, Fourth Army Corps, and the approval thereof by Brevet Brig. Gen. Joseph Conrad, commanding Second Division Central District of Texas, August 26, 1865, to audit and pay to Sergt. James W. Kingon, Company H, Forty-second Regiment Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry, the amount of all pay, compensation, and allowances withheld from him by reason of said proceedings, findings, and sentence of said court-martial and the said approval thereof, as fully and completely as if such proceedings, findings, and sentence had never been had or made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUFUS NEAL.

The bill (S. 6161) for the relief of Rufus Neal was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand three hundred and seventy-nine" and insert "one thousand seven hundred and fifty," so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Rufus Neal, of Marion County, Ind., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,750, as full compensation for the extra services performed by said Neal in the Engineer Department of the United States Army, as a sawyer and engineer at Nashville, Tenn., during the civil war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOUNT VERNON AVENUE ASSOCIATION.

The bill (S. 5252) to provide for the building of a public avenue on the south side of the Potomac River from the city of Washington to Mount Vernon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the treasurer of the Mount Vernon Avenue Association, a corporation chartered and existing under the laws of the State of Virginia, the said Mount Vernon Avenue Association being the assignee of the State of Virginia under the provisions of a joint resolution of the general assembly of the said State of Virginia, approved on the 5th day of March, 1888, the sum of $120,000, being the sum advanced by the State of Virginia to the United States under the provisions of an act passed by the general assembly of the State of Virginia on the 27th day of December, 1790, to be used toward erecting public buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the Federal Government. And the payment of the said sum of $120,000 to the treasurer of the Mount Vernon Avenue Association shall be in full satisfaction and payment of any and all debts, claims, or demands on the part of the State of Virginia or of her assignee, the Mount Vernon Avenue Association aforesaid, growing out of any money or moneys advanced, loaned, or paid out to the United States by the State of Virginia by virtue of the provisions of the said act passed by the general assembly of Virginia on the 27th day of December, 1790, or under the provisions of any other law, State or national, for the purpose of aiding in the erection of public buildings for the Federal Government in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the State of Maryland, the sum of $72,000, being the sum advanced by the State of Maryland to the United States under the provisions of a joint resolution passed by the general assembly of the State of Maryland on the 19th day of December, 1791, to be used toward erecting public buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the Federal Government. And the payment of the said sum of $72,000 to the State of Maryland shall be in full satisfaction and payment of any and all debts, claims, or demands on the part of the State of Maryland growing out of any money or moneys advanced, loaned, or paid out to the United States by the State of Maryland by virtue of the provisions of the said joint resolution passed by the general assembly of Maryland on the 19th day of December, 1791, or under the provisions of any other law, State or national, for the purposes of aiding in the erection of public buildings for the Federal Government in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be in force from the date of its passage.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, from the reading of the bill as I caught it, it is a bill for the construction of streets over in Virginia. I think we really ought to have some explanation of it. I do not know that I have any objection to it, but I simply want some explanation of what the bill contemplates. I think it had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DANIEL. I trust the Senator will not object to the consideration of the bill. I think when he understands the bill he will have no objection to it.

Mr. BURKETT. I withdraw my objection, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the bill reported by the committee, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the payment of certain moneys advanced by the States of Virginia and Maryland to the United States Government to be applied toward erecting public buildings for the Federal Government in the District of Columbia."

REORGANIZATION OF NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. 93) relating to the reorganization of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. KEAN. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

SALES OF INTOXICANTS ON GOVERNMENT PREMISES.

The bill (S. 915) to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in buildings, ships, navy-yards, and parks and other premises owned or used by the United States Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. CARTER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Montana, the bill will go over without prejudice.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HINTON, W. VA.

The bill (S. 157) providing for the erection of a public building in the city of Hinton, W. Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, at the top of page 2, to strike out:

SEC. 2. That the plans, specifications, and full estimate for said building shall be made and approved according to law before work thereon shall be commenced. Until this is done none of the money so appropriated shall be used.

SEC. 3. That the building shall contain such fireproof vaults as may be necessary to protect from destruction by fire the funds and post-office, court, and other records, and it shall also be provided with proper heating and ventilating apparatus.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The building to be erected shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected upon the site already selected and purchased by him in the city of Hinton, W. Va., a building to be used as and for a post-office building, as a place for holding United States courts, and for other purposes of the Federal Government at the said city of Hinton, W. Va., which said building shall cost, complete, not to exceed the sum of $50,000.

The building to be erected shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PLATTSMOUTH, NEBR.

The bill (S. 1933) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Plattsmouth, Nebr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the words "sum of," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to erect a substantial and commodious building, with fireproof vaults and suitable fixtures, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Plattsmouth, State of Nebraska. The building, when completed upon the plans and specifications to be made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $75,000. No plan of said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury if the same involve an expenditure exceeding the sum of $50,000 for building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA JOHNSON.

The bill (H. R. 16770) granting land to Anna Johnson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Anna Johnson, wife of Gung Sing, alias Jim Johnson, a patent to the following-described land, to wit: The southwest quarter of section 29, in township 13 south, of range 25 east of the New Mexico principal meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATENTS FOR LANDS IN IDAHO.

The bill (H. R. 17005) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church for certain lands in the State of Idaho was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States for the following described lands: The southeast quarter of section 36, township 4 south, range 34 east, of Boise meridian, containing 160 acres; but the patent shall not issue until the Indians of the said reservation shall have given their consent to the grant through their business committee or council in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall provide.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT AT JACKSON, KY.

The bill (H. R. 14382) to establish a United States court at Jackson, in the eastern district of Kentucky, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCREARY. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Kentucky.

FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE.

The bill (S. 2487) to amend section 5278 of the Revised Statutes was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not object to that bill. I am sure he does not understand it or he would not object to it. The only proposed change to be made by the bill in existing law is to allow extradition on an information. A great many of the States prosecute altogether by information. The circuit court of appeals has held that a man can not be extradited from one State to another on an information filed against him. This is merely to amend the law so that criminals may be brought to justice in States where they violate the laws of those States. I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma, when he understands this bill, can not have any objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma insist upon his objection?

Mr. OWEN. I insist upon my objection, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. OWEN subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to withdraw my objection to Senate bill 2487.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma withdraws his objection to the bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 5278 of the Revised Statutes so as to read as follows:

SEC. 5278. Whenever the executive authority of any State or Territory demands any person, as a fugitive from justice, of the executive authority of any State or Territory to which such person has fled, and produces a copy of an indictment found, an information duly filed, or an affidavit made before a magistrate of any State or Territory, charging the person demanded with having committed treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the State or Territory from whence the person so charged has fled, it shall be the duty of the executive authority of the State or Territory to which such person has fled to cause him to be arrested and secured and to cause notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear. If no such agent appears within six months from the time of the arrest, the prisoner may be discharged. All costs or expenses incurred in the apprehending, securing, and transmitting such fugitive to the State or Territory making such demand shall be paid by such State or Territory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE SHIPMENTS OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

The bill (S. 6576) to regulate the interstate-commerce shipments of intoxicating liquors was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for that bill.

Mr. FRYE. The bill has gone over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has gone over at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

DISPOSITION OF TOWN SITES.

The bill (S. 6018) providing for the disposition of town sites in connection with reclamation projects, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

RESURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

The bill (H. R. 13577) providing for the resurvey of certain public lands in the State of Nebraska was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be made a resurvey of the lands in township 25 north, range 15; township 26 north, range 31; township 34 north, range 32, and township 24 north, range 46, all west of the sixth principal meridian, in the State of Nebraska; and abrogates all rules and regulations of the Interior Department requiring petitions from all settlers asking for a resurvey and agreement to abide by the result of the same, so far as these lands are concerned, but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the present bona fide claim of any actual occupant of said lands so occupied, and before any survey is ordered it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the former official survey of the lands is so inaccurate or obliterated as to make it necessary to survey the land, and only such parts of the land where the survey is so inaccurate or obliterated shall be surveyed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. Let that bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

ESTATE OF JULIUS JACOBS.

The bill (S. 5788) for the relief of the estate of Julius Jacobs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $2,000 to the estate of the late Julius Jacobs, being the amount of money paid by such estate to the Treasurer of the United States in satisfaction of the loss of an equal sum taken by parties unknown from the vaults of the subtreasury of the United States in the city of San Francisco, Cal., while the same was under guard of United States troops during and after the fire which followed the earthquake of April 18, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF STATUE OF PRESIDENT WASHINGTON.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 124) authorizing the presentation of the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds, to the Smithsonian Institution, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on the Library, with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "hereby," to strike out "presented to" and to insert "transferred to the custody of," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds east of the Capitol, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the custody of the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds, to the Smithsonian Institution."

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the report accompanying that joint resolution be printed in the Record.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, submitted the following report, to accompany H. J. Res. 124:

The Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 124) authorizing the presentation of the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds, to the Smithsonian Institution, have had the same under consideration and report it back with the following amendments:

In line 5 strike out the words "presented to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "transferred to the custody of."

Amend the title by striking out the word "presentation" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "transfer."

In reporting the joint resolution to the House of Representatives the Committee on the Library say:

"The statue of Washington referred to by the resolution was authorized by act of Congress July 14, 1832, and it was designed to be placed in the center of the Rotunda of the Capitol. Subsequently it was ordered removed to the east of the Capitol.

"The statue is the work of Horatio Greenough, a sculptor of eminence in his time. It was not designed for an outdoor work, and in its present location the semineude figure of Washington excites pity rather than admiration.

"The committee are informed that the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution desire to have the statue and that they will give it a suitable location."

At the request of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds several sculptors and workers in marble have examined the Washington statue, and all agree that the soft Italian marble from which it is cut can not withstand the action of the elements in this latitude.

The following letter gives the views of Dr. Charles D. Walcott, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, as to the transfer:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
Washington, D. C., March 12, 1908.

DEAR MR. MANN: In response to your request, I have recently made a thorough examination of the Greenough statue of Washington, which is located on the plaza east of the Capitol. The statue is being injured by weathering, owing to the softness of the marble, and it should be protected, both as an object of historical interest and of art.

If the statue is transferred to the custody of the Smithsonian Institution, I will endeavor, with the approval of the Regents of the Institution, to provide a suitable place for it.

As the present granite base is inappropriate, provision should be made for a marble base in keeping with the statue, and also for the cost of moving and properly resetting the statue.

Very truly, yours,

CHAS. D. WALCOTT, Secretary.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,

United States House of Representatives.

Regent of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C.

As amended the joint resolution will read:

"Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds, to the Smithsonian Institution.

Resolved, etc., That the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds east of the Capitol, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the custody of the Smithsonian Institution."

PROBATION AND PAROLE SYSTEM FOR THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 6242) for the establishment of a probation and parole system for the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN subsequently said: Mr. President, I am advised that the objection to the bill (S. 6242) for the establishment of a probation and parole system for the District of Columbia is withdrawn. I ask that that bill may be recurred to. It is a matter of local interest and affects the schools.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection previously made to that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the bill read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That a commission is hereby constituted to be known as the "probation commission" which shall consist ex officio of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia for the time being holding the criminal court, the judges of the police court, the judge of the juvenile court, as well as of two bona fide residents of the District of Columbia who have resided there for at least five years immediately preceding their appointment, to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for a term of three years or until the appointment of their successors; except that the first appointment shall be one for a term of two years and one for a term of three years, and all vacancies in said appointments, except by the expiration of the term of appointment, shall be filled for the unexpired term only.

Sec. 2. That said probation commission shall serve without compensation except as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 3. That it shall be the duty of said commission to supervise and direct the enforcement of this act and all other laws relating to the subject of probation and parole in the District of Columbia; and they shall have power to make and enforce suitable rules and regulations for carrying them into effect, and may suspend or discharge any officers or agents appointed by them whenever, in their judgment, it may be expedient to do so. It shall make and preserve a record of its investigations and official acts and shall render an annual report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia showing the work done by them.

Sec. 4. That said commission shall annually elect a chairman and secretary from its members and may fix a salary for the secretary not to exceed $100 per annum. It may also appoint a chief probation guardian at a salary of $1,800 per annum, and three probation guardians, one of whom shall be a woman, at a salary of $1,200 per annum each, and three assistant probation guardians, one of whom shall be a woman, at a salary of $900 per annum each, and a clerk at a salary of $720.

Sec. 5. That volunteer probation guardians, either male or female, may be appointed by said commission, who shall serve without compensation and shall have such powers and perform such duties as may be assigned to them by said commission or chief probation guardian.

Sec. 6. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall provide such office accommodations, furniture, appliances, stationery, postage stamps, and the amount necessary to cover all other incidental expenses, including books and books of reference, as may be necessary and proper for the prosecution of the work intrusted to said commission, and for the car fare and traveling expenses of either of said probation guardians when on official business.

Sec. 7. That the chief probation guardian shall have general charge, under the directions of the probation commission, of all the details of the probation and parole work and be held responsible by the commission for the proper performance by the probation guardians and their assistants of the duties intrusted to them. It shall be the duty of probation guardians to attend the sessions of the court to which they may from time to time be assigned by the probation commission or the chief probation guardian. And they and the assistant probation guardians shall perform such duties as may be required of them by the chief probation guardian, the orders and regulations of the probation commission, or by the several courts.

Sec. 8. That the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the police courts of the District of Columbia, and the juvenile court of the District of Columbia shall have power in any case, except those involving treason, murder, rape, arson, or kidnapping, after conviction or the entry of a plea of guilty to a felony or misdemeanor and the imposition of a sentence thereon, either of a fine or imprisonment, or both, to place the defendant or defendants upon probation, when it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court that the ends of justice and the best interests of the District will be subserved thereby, and may suspend the execution of the sentence for such time and upon such terms as in its discretion may seem best, and place the person or persons under the charge and supervision of the probation commission during such suspension. Every person placed on probation shall observe all rules prescribed for his conduct by the court or by the probation commission, and report to the commission or guardians as directed. He shall be furnished by the clerk of the court with a written statement of the terms and conditions of his probation at the time when he is placed thereunder.

Sec. 9. That it shall be the duty of the chief probation guardian from time to time to visit the jail and workhouse and all the reformatory institutions in the District of Columbia as well as the penal institutions to which United States prisoners from the District of Columbia are sent, for the purpose of ascertaining the character and habits of the prisoners thus committed to those institutions from said District and whenever it shall seem to him that a prisoner or inmate, excepting when convicted of treason, murder, rape, arson, or kidnapping, has so reformed that he will become a good citizen and may with propriety and safety to the community and with benefit to himself be released from custody upon parole, he shall certify that fact to the probation commission; the probation commission shall carefully investigate all cases presented to it either by the chief probation guardian or by any other person or by the prisoner himself, and if it is satisfied that the prisoner ought to be released on parole it shall recommend such parole to the court which imposed the sentence. If after consideration of said recommendation and the investigation by the court of the prisoner's record, and after conference with the prosecuting officer, and in United States cases obtaining the consent of the Attorney-General, the court shall be satisfied that the interests of the community and the good of the prisoner or such inmate would be best promoted by releasing him upon parole the court may pass the necessary order upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, and if such person shall at any time thereafter be convicted of any crime or misdemeanor, he may be recommitted by the court to serve the remainder of his original sentence not served at the time of his parole in addition to the sentence imposed for such subsequent offense. And for the purposes of this act the court shall have control of the sentence during the entire time covered by it, wherever the prisoner may be confined, but no persons shall be put on probation or parole except with his own consent.

Sec. 10. That upon the termination of the term fixed for such probation or parole, the probation guardian shall report that fact to the court, with a statement of the conduct of the person while on probation or parole, and the court may thereupon discharge the person on probation or parole from further supervision, or it may extend the probation or parole term, as it shall seem proper to the court. At any time during the probationary or parole term the court by which the person was released may, in its discretion, revoke and terminate such probation or parole, or modify the terms and conditions thereof; and whenever the ends of justice shall be best subserved thereby, may terminate the period of probation or parole and discharge the prisoner so held from serving out the unexpired sentence. If the order of probation or parole shall be revoked and terminated by the court prior to the expiration of the term of probation or parole, the court shall cause the rearrest of the person on probation or parole and require him to serve the sentence as originally imposed, and the time of probation or parole shall not be taken into account to diminish the time for which he was originally sentenced; but he shall serve the full sentence not theretofore served, without taking into account the time he was out on probation or parole.

Sec. 11. That as used in this act the term "probation" shall mean the state of a person the execution of whose sentence has been suspended, and "parole" shall mean the release of a person from further serving a sentence imposed.

Sec. 12. That the following sums named, respectively, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, are hereby appropriated, one half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia on vouchers audited and approved by the auditor of the said District, pursuant to existing law: Chief probation guardian, $1,000; three probation guardians, at $1,200 each; three assistant probation guardians, at $900 each; one clerk, at $720; compensation of secretary to the commission not to exceed $100; rent of offices, $1,000; furniture and equipment of office, $500; contingent expenses, including postage, traveling expenses, purchase of law books, books of reference, and periodicals, supplies, and all other necessary incidental items, $1,500, amounting in all to $11,920.

Sec. 13. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill—I could not catch it from the reading very clearly—if there is any discretionary power vested in the court? I notice that it is said, "upon such terms and conditions as the court may prescribe." Is it the intention that the court shall be vested really with a discretion as to whether or not the recommendations shall be carried out?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; the court is vested with a discretion, but this is only intended to deal with that class of cases that result in filling up the institutions with people who are merely nominally guilty. It leaves to the court the power and duty of assorting them out and determining whether or not such people are criminals and whether they are such people as had better be out and living at their own expense.

Mr. BACON. I gathered as much, but I did not know from the reading how far the judge could control it. Is the power given to the judge in whose court the party was convicted?

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that the section in reference to that be again read. It is near the end of the bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is section 8.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read section 8 as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read section 8, and read as follows:

Sec. 8. That the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the police courts of the District of Columbia, and the juvenile court of the District of Columbia shall have power in any case, except those involving treason, murder, rape, arson, or kidnapping, after conviction or the entry of a plea of guilty to a felony or misdemeanor and the imposition of a sentence thereon, either of a fine or imprisonment, or both, to place the defendant or defendants upon probation, when it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court that the ends of justice and the best interests of the District will be subserved thereby.

Mr. BACON. I will not ask for the further reading of the section. That explains the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTORS OF HAROLD BROWN.

The bill (S. 5905) for the relief of the executors of the estate of Harold Brown, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the executors of the estate of Harold Brown, late a citizen of Newport, in the State of Rhode Island, $861.75, being an excess of taxes improperly levied and collected on legacies and distributive shares of the personal property of the estate, which tax was paid by the executors on October 20, 1900, the payment to be in full for all claims by reason of such assessment and collection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAUL BUTLER.

The bill (S. 5997) for the relief of Paul Butler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Paul Butler $3,936.72, in full compensation for the use by the United States from March 31, 1874, to April 30, 1880, of certain patented improvements in hook attachments for firearms to the number of 49,200, at the value of 8 cents each, as found by the Court of Claims in the case of Butler against The United States, 23 Court of Claims, page 335.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFUND OF EXCESS DUTIES.

The bill (S. 3908) to refund certain excess duties paid upon importations of absinthe and kirschwasser from Switzerland between June 1, 1898, and December 5, 1898, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Messrs. Luyties Brothers, of New York, $3,830.50, for certain excess duties paid upon importations of absinthe and kirschwasser from Switzerland between June 1, 1898, and December 5, 1898.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MODELS OF WAR VESSELS IN STATE CAPITOL BUILDINGS.

The bill (S. 142) providing for the deposit of a model of any vessel of war of the United States Navy, bearing the name of a State of the United States, in the capitol building of said State was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "view," to insert "no model to cost in excess of $3,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a fully completed model of each vessel of war of the Navy of the United States which now has or may hereafter be given the name borne by any State of the United States, said model to be deposited in the capitol building of said State, and in every case said model shall be placed in a prominent position, convenient to public view, no model to cost in excess of $3,500: Provided, That such model shall not cease to be, when so deposited, the property of the Government of the United States, but shall be at all times subject to the authority and direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA.

The bill (S. 5648) to establish the Glacier National Park west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains and south of the international boundary line in Montana, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, section 1, line 8, after the words "to wit," to strike out:

Commencing at a point on the international boundary line between the United States and the Dominion of Canada at the closing corner for sections 4 and 5 in township 37 north, range 21 west, Montana principal meridian, Montana; thence following the lines of public land surveys between surveyed and unsurveyed lands, at this date, southerly to the quarter section corner on the east section line of section 10 of township 33 north, range 19 west; thence southerly following the surveyed and unsurveyed section lines to the eighth standard parallel north; thence offset on said parallel to the closing corner for sections 3 and 4, township 32 north, range 19 west; thence south to the meander corner between sections 33 and 34 on the north bank of the Middle Fork of Flathead River; thence following the north bank of said stream.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Commencing at a point on the international boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada at the middle of the Flathead River; thence following southerly along and with the middle of the Flathead River to its confluence with the Middle Fork of the Flathead River; thence following the north bank of said Middle Fork of the Flathead River.

So as to make the section read:

That there is hereby withdrawn from all forms of location, appropriation, entry, settlement, or sale, except as provided in this act, all of the public lands of the United States within the limits of that certain area in the State of Montana particularly described by metes and bounds as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point on the international boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada at the middle of the Flathead River; thence following southerly along and with the middle of the Flathead River to its confluence with the Middle Fork of the Flathead River; thence following the north bank of said Middle Fork of the Flathead River to where it is crossed by the north boundary of the right of way of the Great Northern Railroad; thence following the said right of way to where it intersects the west boundary of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation; thence northerly along said west boundary to its intersection with the international boundary; thence along said international boundary to the place of beginning: Provided, That all surveyed lands within the limits of said tract are excluded therefrom, together with any valid mining location existing on the 1st day of January, 1908, and any settler on such excluded surveyed land and the owner or locator of any such valid mining claim shall have and enjoy the right of ingress and egress as to such claim or location. The area described as aforesaid is hereby dedicated to use forever as a public park and pleasure ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States, and the said area shall henceforth be called "The Glacier National Park."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, before that amendment is agreed to I wish to ask some one who is responsible for the bill what is the area embraced in this reservation.

Mr. NELSON. The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Dixon] reported the bill.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to have some Senator give me the information.

Mr. DIXON. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that the bill proposes to include about 1,000,000 acres upon the crest, or the backbone, of the Rocky Mountains next to the Canadian border. It embraces within its area the few remnants of glaciers of the old glacial period. The Geological Survey and everyone, I think, having anything to do with the matter are unanimous in favor of the bill.

Mr. MONEY. That is sufficient, Mr. President. I only wanted to know that there is no land subject to settlement to be included within the limits of the reservation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, on page 3, section 2, line 25, after the word "dead," to insert the word "or;" in the same line, after the word "down," to strike out "or decaying;" on page 4, beginning in line 1, to strike out "by actual settlers in the adjacent county within the United States;" and, on line 12, after the word "power," to insert the following proviso:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant a right of way for the construction of railroads under the provisions of the acts of Congress authorizing and permitting the construction of railroads over and across the public lands within the limits of forest reservations to any person or corporation who may desire to construct such railroads along the said Flathead River or any of its tributaries within the boundaries of said Glacier National Park.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the Glacier National Park shall be in the custody and under the exclusive control of the Secretary of Agriculture, and said Secretary is hereby authorized and empowered to make and promulgate, and in his discretion, from time to time, to amend or revoke such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to protect fish and game and to preserve the park in a state of nature as far as consistent with the purposes of this act. Said Secretary may, in his discretion, execute leases to parcels of ground not exceeding 10 acres in extent at any one place to any one person or company and for not to exceed twenty years, when such ground is necessary for the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors; and he may also sell and permit the removal of dead or down timber; and persons now having summer homes or cottages erected, or persons whom he may hereafter authorize to erect summer homes or cottages within the limits of said park shall be permitted to use and enjoy the same with not to exceed one acre of land on which the buildings are or may be located, in each case, subject to this act and such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe: Provided, That the use of water for the generation of power may be permitted for not exceeding fifty years, subject to the right of said Secretary to regulate charges for the use of such power: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant a right of way for the construction of railroads under the provisions of the acts of Congress authorizing and permitting the construction of railroads over and across the public lands within the limits of forest reservations to any person or corporation who may desire to construct such railroads along the said Flathead River or any of its tributaries within the boundaries of said Glacier National Park.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I think that bill had better go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago I objected to the consideration of Senate bill 5648 establishing the Glacier National Park in Montana, and so forth. I desire to withdraw my objection to that bill. I am not in favor of creating additional parks, but I am told that this bill is properly guarded, and I will withdraw my objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado withdraws his objection.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5648) to establish the Glacier National Park west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains and south of the international boundary line in Montana, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, recurring to the bill, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 12, before the amendment already agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may utilize such lands, bodies of waters, and streams in said park as he may deem necessary in connection with the operations under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to hear from the Senator from Montana in reference to this bill.

Mr. CARTER. The amendment I offered was suggested by the Reclamation Service as a precaution. Certain lakes in this park will be flooded to some extent by the building of dams and the backing up of water in the park for Reclamation Service purposes. The amendment is offered to the end that any ambiguity which may exist on the subject of the right to back up the water into the park may be eliminated.

Mr. HEYBURN. Just so it does not recognize the right of the Reclamation Service or any other service to take possession of and sell the right to use the water, I have no objection to the bill. But I should like to have it distinctly understood that any measure or amendment to this bill or any other that undertakes to recognize the right of the Government to sell the right to use the water will meet with objection.

Mr. TELLER. I understood that was not the case. If it was, I certainly should have objected to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN CROW INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 2963) for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Crow Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to immediately cause to be surveyed all the land embraced within the limits of the Crow Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana.

Sec. 2. That so soon as all the lands embraced within said Crow Indian Reservation shall have been surveyed, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall cause allotments of the same to be made to all persons having tribal rights with said Crow Indians, who have not heretofore received allotments of land, under the provisions of the allotment laws of the United States: Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotments to be made under the provisions of this act to all children of Indians affected hereby so long as the tribe is possessed of any unallotted tribal or reservation lands.

Sec. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior may reserve such lands as he may deem necessary for agency, school, and religious purposes, to remain reserved as long as needed, and as long as agency, school, or religious institutions are maintained thereon for the benefit of the Indians, and in addition thereto not to exceed 5,000 acres of timber lands for the common use of said Indians.

Sec. 4. That there is hereby granted to the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions the following-described land, now and for many years reserved for and occupied by St. Xavier's Mission, to wit: The east half of the southwest quarter and the west half of the southeast quarter of section 23, township 4 south, range 32 east, on the Crow Reservation, in Montana, containing 160 acres, more or less.

Sec. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior shall also reserve not to exceed 500,000 acres of said lands for the purpose of establishing the said Crow Indians in the business of breeding and selling horses, under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Interior; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to expend in fencing the said lands so reserved for horse breeding and selling purposes and in the construction of sheds, barns, corrals, fences, and buildings necessary in carrying out the provisions of this section such portion, when available, of the $40,000 that was set apart for the fencing of said Crow Reservation in the act of Congress, approved April 27, 1904, entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation of Montana and making appropriation to carry the same into effect."

Sec. 6. That upon the completion of said allotments the President of the United States shall appoint a commission consisting of five persons to inspect, classify, appraise, and value all of said lands that shall not have been allotted in severalty to said Indians or granted or reserved by the terms of this act, said commission to be constituted as follows: Two of said commissioners shall be persons holding tribal relations with said Indians, one representative of the Indian Bureau, and two resident citizens of the State of Montana.

Sec. 7. That within thirty days after their appointment said commissioners shall meet at some point within the Crow Indian Reservation and organize by the election of one of their number as chairman.

Said commission is hereby empowered to select a clerk at a salary not to exceed $7 per day.

Sec. 8. That said commissioners shall then proceed to personally inspect and classify and appraise by the smallest legal subdivisions of 40 acres each all of the remaining lands embraced within said reservation. In making such classification and appraisal said lands shall be divided into the following classes: First, agricultural land; second, grazing land; third, mineral land, the mineral land not to be appraised; fourth, timber land. That said commissioners shall be paid a salary of not to exceed $10 per day each while actually employed in the inspection and classification of said lands, such inspection and classification to be completed within one year from the date of the organization of said commission. That said commission shall in their report of lands of the fourth class determine as nearly as possible the amount of standing merchantable timber on legal subdivisions thereof, and in so determining the amount of timber they shall be empowered to employ such timber cruisers as may be necessary at salaries not to exceed $8 per day while so actively employed.

Sec. 9. That when said commission shall have completed the classification and appraisal of all of said lands and the same shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the lands shall be disposed of under the provisions of the homestead, desert-land, mineral, and town-site laws of the United States, except as hereinafter otherwise provided and excepting sections 16 and 36 of each township, or any part thereof, for which the State of Montana has not heretofore received indemnity lands under existing laws, which sections, or parts thereof, are hereby granted to the State of Montana for school purposes. And in case either of said sections, or parts thereof, is lost to the State by reason of allotment thereof to any Indian or Indians, or otherwise, the governor of said State, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized to select other unoccupied, unreserved, nonmineral lands within said reservation, not exceeding two sections in any one township, which selections must be made within the sixty days immediately prior to the date fixed by the President's proclamation opening the surplus lands to settlement: Provided, That the United States shall pay to the said Indians for the lands in said sections 16 and 36, so granted, or the lands within said reservation selected in lieu thereof, the sum of $1.25 per acre.

Sec. 10. That said lands shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the time when and the manner in which these lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof, and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands, except as prescribed in such proclamation: Provided, That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late civil and the Spanish wars, as defined and prescribed in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1901, shall not be abridged: Provided further, That the price of said lands shall be the appraised value thereof, as fixed by the said commission, but settlers under the homestead law who shall reside upon and cultivate the land entered in good faith for the period required by existing law shall pay one-fifth of the appraised value in cash at the time of entry, and the remainder in five equal annual installments, to be paid one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from and after the date of entry, and shall be entitled to a patent for the lands so entered upon the payment to the local land officers of said five annual payments, and in addition thereto the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry as now provided by law where the price of the land is $1.25 per acre, and no other and further charge of any kind whatsoever shall be required of such settler to entitle him to a patent for the land covered by his entry: Provided, That if any entryman fails to make such payments, or any of them, within the time stated, all rights in and to the land covered by his or her entry shall at once cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited, and the entry shall be forfeited and canceled: And provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent homestead settlers from commuting their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, by paying for the land entered the price fixed by said commission, receiving credit for payments previously made.

Sec. 11. That the proceeds received from the sale of said lands in conformity with this act shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and after deducting the expenses of the Commission, of classification and sale of lands, and such other incidental expenses as shall have been necessarily incurred, and expenses of the survey of the land, shall be expended or paid as follows: One-half of said money to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior as he may deem advisable for the benefit of said Indians in the purchase of live stock, farming implements, and other necessary articles to aid said Indians in farming and stock raising and in the education and civilization of said Indians, and the remaining half of said money to be paid to said Indians and persons holding tribal rights on said reservation semi-annually, share and share alike.

Sec. 12. That all of said lands returned by said Commission as timber lands shall be sold and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That the lands within said reservation, however classified, shall, on and after sixty days from the date fixed by the President's proclamation opening said lands, be subject to exploration, location, and purchase under the general provisions of the United States mineral and coal land laws at not less than the price therein fixed and not less than the appraised value of the land, except that no mineral or coal exploration, location, or purchase shall be permitted upon any lands allotted to Indians or reserved under the provisions of this act.

Sec. 13. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any part of the land herein described, except sections 16 and 36, or the equivalent, in each township, that may be granted to the State of Montana, the reserved tracts hereby mentioned for agency and school purposes, or to dispose of lands except as provided herein, or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands, or any part thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of said lands and to expend and pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received.

Sec. 14. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to set apart from said lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, such tracts for town-site purposes as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause any such reservations, or parts thereof, to be surveyed into blocks and lots of suitable size, and to be appraised and disposed of under such regulations as he may prescribe, preference right of purchase to be given to actual occupants of said town lots at time of survey of same. The net proceeds derived from the sale of such lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians.

SEC. 15. That all lands hereby opened to settlement remaining undisposed of at the end of five years from the date of the President's proclamation opening the same to settlement shall be sold to the highest bidder for cash at not less than $1.25 per acre, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and any lands remaining unsold ten years after said lands shall have been opened to entry shall be sold to the highest bidder for cash, under such regulations as said Secretary may prescribe, in tracts not exceeding 640 acres to any one person.

SEC. 16. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for the lands granted to the State of Montana and for lands reserved for agency and school purposes, at the rate of $1.25 per acre; also the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to survey, allot, classify, and appraise the lands in said reservation as provided herein, to defray the expense of the appraisement and survey of town sites, and for the survey and reconstruction of irrigation systems on said lands, the latter sum of $200,000 to be reimbursable out of the funds arising from the sale of said lands.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know from the Senator who reported the bill whether there is any curtailment of the amount of the allotment.

Mr. DIXON. I will say to the Senator from Colorado there is none whatever. They were allotted many years ago, under the Dawes Act.

Mr. TELLER. I had an idea there was.

Mr. DIXON. No; they average about a thousand acres to a family under the allotments they have now.

Mr. TELLER. It does not change the law as to the allotments?

Mr. DIXON. Not in the least.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOLS OF MINES AND MINING.

The bill (S. 3764) to apply a portion of the proceeds of the sales of public lands to the endowment of schools or departments of mines and mining, and to regulate the expenditure thereof, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, arising from the sale of public lands in any States and Territories and possessions of the United States other than Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, to be paid to each State and Territory, for the establishment and maintenance of schools or departments of mines and mining in connection with the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts now established, or which may be hereafter established, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and other institutions, as provided in section 3 of this act, the sum of $15,000 for the year ending June 30, 1908, and an annual increase of the amount of such appropriation thereafter for ten years by an additional sum of $1,000 over the preceding year until the annual amount to be paid thereafter to each State and Territory shall be $25,000.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what public lands there are out of which this appropriation is to be paid?

Mr. DICK. There are public lands in the Territory of Alaska, the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, and Wisconsin, outside of the irrigation States.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. My attention has been directed to the bill by the fact that the name of Arkansas has been mentioned. What does the Senator propose to do with the public lands in the State of Arkansas?

Mr. DICK. The bill proposes to apply a certain portion of the money derived from the public lands to the establishment and maintenance of schools or departments of instruction in mines and mining.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am entirely in favor of that. It is a worthy enterprise, and I have no objection whatever to Arkansas contributing its proportion.

Mr. KEAN. What is the amount of the public lands? What I am trying to get at is this: My impression is that outside of the States and Territories which the bill excepts there is very little public land, and therefore I do not see where the $15,000 annually to all the States is to come from.

Mr. DICK. If it does not reach that amount it will not be distributed, but the returns for the years back as far as 1899 and down to 1905 exceed the required amount.

Mr. KEAN. Annually?

Mr. DICK. Yes.

Mr. KEAN. I thought we were probably passing a useless bill.

Mr. DICK. No; it is a good bill; and it is asked for by the mining States and the mining interests of every kind and character.

Mr. KEAN. And the other States pay the expenses of the States which are excepted. They get the reclamation fund and they get this fund in addition.

Mr. DICK. They do.

Mr. NELSON. The trouble with the bill is it excludes all the mining States and devotes to this purpose the proceeds of public lands in States where there are no mines. It takes them and uses them for a school of mines.

Mr. DICK. The bill aims to treat the mining schools as we now treat the agricultural colleges, and to give a portion of the proceeds for their support, which we believe to be a matter of national importance and of national and general benefit.

Mr. KEAN. Does not the Senator think that the States which are excepted ought to pay their share of the appropriation if they are going to get the benefit from it?

Mr. DICK. The only States excepted are those where the funds are being used for irrigation purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Why should not an amendment be added excepting those States from the benefit of the proposed act? They are getting all of the land and all the benefit.

Mr. DICK. The bill does so provide. Those States are now excepted.

Mr. KEAN. Yes; they are excepted; and then they get the benefit of all the other public lands in the United States.

Mr. DICK. The lands in some instances are few where these mining schools are being conducted or carried on. This bill has been favorably reported several times in other Congresses. It has been much discussed, and, I think, is generally understood. It will be beneficial legislation, and comes to this body favorably reported by your committee.

Mr. President, the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred this bill, having considered the same, recommend its passage.

The bill herewith reported does not share in the proceeds of the sale of public lands in the States mentioned in the national irrigation act of June 17, 1902, as beneficiaries under said act. The amounts available for the purposes of the bill from the sale of public lands outside the irrigation States for the year ending June 30, 1905, and is taken from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the year ending June 30, 1905, pages 201, 208, and 209:

Alabama	$20,002.45
Alaska	9,202.06

It is unnecessary to present any extended argument in favor of the adoption of this measure. The principle upon which the bill proceeds is one which has been long established in our legislation, the Congress having in 1862 committed itself to the policy of extending Federal aid in the way of grants of the public land to the several States for educational purposes. The act of 1862 has been followed and supplemented by the acts of March 2, 1887, and of August 30, 1890, each of which acts carried specific appropriations of money derived from the sale of public lands for the purpose of strengthening and extending the institutions established under the act of 1862. The purpose of the pending bill is directly in line with the policy heretofore pursued, and may properly be regarded as no more than supplementary to the act of 1862. That act made no direct reference to the great mining industries of the country and carried no provision for research or experiment looking to their development. The pending measure is intended to provide for this deficiency, and very wisely does it by strengthening the institutions already established and already partially equipped for the work.

The splendid success which has in every case attended the establishment of the agricultural and mechanical colleges, and the invaluable work they have done in developing and increasing the agricultural wealth of the nation, have abundantly justified the wisdom of the act which founded them. Your committee believe that the passage of this bill will do for the mining interests of the country what has been so well done under the original act for our agricultural interests. It is a matter of common knowledge that, notwithstanding the great value of our mineral product, amounting in the year 1900 to the stupendous aggregate of $1,070,108,888, there is yet an enormous waste in the present process of extracting both precious and common minerals. There can be no doubt but what scientific research, investigation, and experiment will eventually develop methods and processes by which a large part of this waste can be avoided and the aggregate wealth of the nation thereby vastly increased.

It is a well-recognized fact that the science and art of agriculture in the United States have been revolutionized through the agency of the agricultural experiment stations established under the act of Congress of 1887. Your committee believe that the same methods which have produced such fruitful results in the field of that great industry will be equally productive when applied to the development of our untold mineral wealth, and it seems incontestable that it is as much the right and the duty of the Federal Government to extend aid in the latter case as in the former. The amount appropriated by the bill to forty-eight States and Territories is for the first year $480,000, and will amount at the end of ten years to $960,000 per annum. If this expenditure should result in increasing by only one-tenth of 1 per cent our annual mineral product, the country would be more than repaid in the direct increase of wealth, of tax-paying power, and, above all, in the widely diffused increase of intelligence and skill; for every dollar of mineral wealth wrested from the soil is new wealth, which goes into general use, permanently increasing the volume of metallic circulation and contributing ready material for the arts, sciences, and the conveniences of civilized life.

There has been received since the foundation of the Government from the sale of public lands the sum of $300,320,075.04. This amount has been covered into the General Treasury, and no charge has been made against it. The total receipts from the disposal of public lands for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, amounted to $4,307,437.15, showing an increase over the previous year of $592,402. Deducting from the receipts of the fiscal year the amount expended and contracted for in the maintenance of the entire land and forest administration, there remained a net surplus in the Treasury from this source of $3,158,441.67.

Of this amount about $1,200,000 was appropriated in accordance with the provision of the act of August 30, 1890, for the maintenance and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established under the provisions of the act of 1862, and about $720,000 for the maintenance of agricultural experiment stations established in accordance with the act of 1887, leaving an unappropriated surplus of $1,238,441.67. Out of this surplus the present bill would absorb for the first year only the comparatively small sum of $480,000, and even when it reaches its maximum the amount withdrawn would be but $960,000, still leaving a wide margin and clearly showing that the bill may be passed without fear of creating embarrassment in any direction.

To fully comprehend the import of the provisions of the bill is, in a large measure, to foresee most of the improvement and progress that will be made in the mining and extraction of the precious, rare, and base metals in the years to come. The effects of education are cumulative, and the value of money expended thereon can not be estimated by the mere cost of educating so many men at so much per capita. Having once received the groundwork which our schools of mines and agricultural colleges give, and having acquired the spirit of investigation and experiment which should really be in the air of all educational institutions, the man is prepared not only to apply that which he has learned, but to go still further and take the initiative in solving problems which have never even been considered within the walls of his school.

The problems which are being presented to the members of the mining and metallurgical profession are increasing in complexity year by year. It is becoming necessary to conduct mining operations at greater depths, and this involves new problems in hoisting, pumping, drainage, and ventilation. The necessity for making closer savings in all metallurgical processes is resulting in the invention of new methods and the improvement of old ones. In many branches methods are now in use which have not undergone any change or improvement for periods varying from a decade to a century, and we can scarcely look to any other source than technical education for leaders to attack these problems. The day of accidental discovery is largely gone by, and the greatest advances of the future must be made by approaching the problems from a scientific point of view and conducting experiments in a more systematic manner than is customary with the hit-or-miss operators whose experiments are conducted without rhyme or reason.

It is easily conceivable, therefore, that if the provisions of this bill should be carried out the money expended would be amply repaid if from the combined annual number of graduates of our mining schools there should be found one whose exceptional ability in any branch of mining or metallurgy would bring about a marked improvement therein. It is wholly within the bounds of possibility that a single invention in metallurgy should result in the annual recovery of precious metals many times greater than the amount to be annually expended on schools of mines, according to the provisions of the bill under consideration. Engineering schools are content for the most part to instruct their pupils in the current practice of the profession. Their field of usefulness, however, could be largely extended by directing their efforts toward professional advance. Investigation and research in such a school should be coordinate with the department of instruction. In aiding the material progress of the world, there are just as great possibilities in wisely directed research as there are in well-imparted instruction. Research means a larger product, a better product, and lower costs. It makes the labor of man more effective, and in the end must redound to the advantage of both producer and consumer. There can be no surplus of research. The value of every ore deposit and every acre of agricultural land is enhanced by improved methods that increase the amount or reduce the cost of production. Every dollar wisely spent in the investigation and solution of agricultural problems adds to the value of millions of acres of agricultural land. Every dollar wisely spent in mining and metallurgical research adds to the value of countless mining claims.

The work of the mining schools already established has proved to be of great value. The mining industry has reached a point where the discoveries of the prospector can be made of great value only by the application of the expert knowledge of men trained in the profession. Great advances have been made within the last few years both in mine operation and ore-treatment methods, and the mining schools must be given a considerable share of the credit for this progress. Millions of dollars annually are added to the wealth and resources of the nation by means of the development of its mineral resources, and the industry is fully entitled to all of the aid which can reasonably be given. The bill once a law will benefit all sections of the country. It will add greatly to the production of wealth and settlement of a part of the country that has immense natural resources.

In 1891 Colorado produced $4,000,000 in gold and $21,100,000 in silver. In 1898, when more modern methods for handling gold ores were fairly under way, the production of gold reached $23,512,819 and of silver $13,676,889.

In 1905 the gold output was $29,805,995 and the silver $7,686,478; adding lead, copper, and tungsten, the total production in Colorado for 1905 was $55,967,547.

It is estimated that a large proportion of this product is the result of improved scientific treatment of ores.

A former Director of the United States Geological Survey, in a letter to the President of the United States, represents fairly the views of a highly trained expert in this matter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1906.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following comments on Senate bill No. 3253:

There can be no question that the mining industry would be greatly benefited and extended by the more thorough training of men who are engaged in mineral production. At the present time a considerable number of mining engineers are graduates from our larger educational institutions, but the great mass of the mineral producers have not been thoroughly trained. A dissemination of geological, chemical, and metallurgical information in mining regions and instruction in the best methods of mining would tend to reduce expensive mistakes and the use of wasteful methods in prospecting, mining, and treatment of ores.

The bill referred to seems well adapted to encourage education and the dissemination of information in respect to mining. It also provides for the investigation of new methods in mining, ore dressing, and metallurgy, which is not elsewhere provided by the Government and which can be carried on with great advantage by mining schools located in mining districts.

Yours, with respect,

CHAS. D. WALCOTT, Director.

The President, The White House.

The extensive work already undertaken by the Government in forestry and irrigation makes it imperative that some provision be made for instruction in these subjects, in order to supply the present urgent demand for experts in these lines of work. The agricultural colleges in which these subjects would naturally be taught will, under the provisions of the bill, be supplied with sufficient funds to carry on the work successfully. Since both mining and agriculture lie at the foundation of national prosperity, it seems both wise and proper for the Government to continue its aid to the agricultural colleges and at the same time to initiate a policy of financial assistance to the mining schools. The history both of industry and of education from the first land-grant act shows conclusively that governmental aid to education is one of the wisest and best methods of public expenditure.

The bill has the indorsement of the American Association of State Mining Schools, of the American Mining Congress, of the Agricultural College Association, and of the Association of State Universities.

Mr. President, I quote in part from a report made upon a like measure in the House:

"The two great sources of our national wealth are agriculture and mining. According to the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, the total value of the agricultural products of the United States for the year 1906 was $6,794,000,000. Deducting from this amount the value of meat, animal milk, and poultry products, which probably constitute one-half of the total valuation, there remains a value for the direct products of the soil of approximately $3,500,000,000. The value of the mineral products of the United States for the year 1906, according to the statistics of the United States Geological Survey, was nearly $2,000,000,000.

"In 1862 the Government took steps for the establishment and maintenance of agricultural colleges in the various States and Territories for teaching the principles of scientific farming. Each of these agricultural colleges so established is now receiving from the Government the sum of $80,000 per annum, and, according to laws already passed, within three or four years under a scheme of progressive appropriation each of these agricultural colleges will be receiving nearly $100,000. The present bill would appropriate only $5,000 for the first year and an additional $5,000 per annum until the maximum amount of $25,000 should be reached in 1912. This is only about one-fourth the amount that the agricultural colleges will be receiving. The value of mineral products in the United States in comparison with agricultural products is much greater proportionately than the ratio between what this bill proposes to appropriate to mining schools and appropriations to agricultural colleges. If the Government can profitably appropriate $100,000 per annum to agricultural colleges, surely it can afford to appropriate one-fourth of this amount to mining schools or departments, in view of the relative importance of our mining output compared with the output of agriculture.

"The effect of governmental action in behalf of these agricultural colleges has been most beneficent. Science has been applied to the soil so that farming has become more scientific and remunerative. By studying the properties and conditions of soils, and scientifically supplying such properties as they have lacked, they have been made to produce manifold more than they could have produced without such treatment. The suitability of certain soils for certain kinds of crops has been investigated, and, as a result, agricultural waste has been reduced to a minimum. The great benefits resulting from these agricultural colleges are apparent to every observant person.

"What these various laws have done for agriculture, this bill proposes to do for mining. It is of the utmost importance that the mineral resources of the nation be conserved, both for the welfare of ourselves and of our posterity. The minerals of the nation are not inexhaustible, and future generations will justly hold us to account if we fail to conserve them to the best of our ability. This bill seeks scientific ways of mining to the end that this industry may be carried on with the least possible amount of waste. It seeks to discover methods for utilizing all the output of a mine that none of it may be lost. It is quite probable that mines which now can not be operated at all, or, if so, can not be profitably operated, within a few years could be made to pay if the invention of new mining apparatus or the improvement of mining methods could be brought about through scientific study and research. In days past, when mining methods were more crude and less scientific, enough valuable ore was forever lost in the mud and ooze of river beds to defray the cost of the appropriations contemplated in this bill many times over. Ores that could not be worked by the crude machinery of these unscientific times could have been made to bear millions of dollars if more enlightened methods and more scientific machinery had been in existence. This bill, if enacted into law, would result in utilizing every bit of our mineral products and the waste would be reduced to an absolute minimum.

"It is not known what new minerals may be hiding in the pockets of the earth that more scientific methods would bring to light. Take radium, for instance, the wonderful mineral of the twentieth century. Little is known of it, and yet it seems to have great properties of light and heat. Under existing conditions no radium has been found in this country. Every atom of it comes from the zinc blends of Bohemia. It is not improbable that even this precious material may be found in America or might be artificially produced from other minerals if our knowledge of mining processes were only more scientific. What strange minerals not yet known to man might be found through the application of science to mining no one can see.

"The progress of the race toward higher planes of civilization is brought about by studying the records of victory and failure that have been made by different investigators, by avoiding those failures and taking advantage of those successes.

"Vast sums of money have been spent in the investigation of mining conditions, but others have not had the record of these investigations and hence have gone over the same road, to meet the same failure at the end. The establishment of schools or departments for instruction in scientific mining is surely of sufficient importance to be a national matter. If the nation should take this up, a record of achievements and failures could be kept, so that the whole country would have the benefit of the investigation pursued by any one school or department or in any particular field of mines and mining. So long as men work independently the country may lose the value of their services and the work which they are doing may be duplicated, but the national establishment of schools and departments of mines and mining, as contemplated in this bill, would give the whole country the benefit of all the research made in all the different schools or departments. As a result, the progress in mining would necessarily be faster, the waste would be less, and much would be done toward the conservation of our mineral resources.

"But this is not all. The loss of life among miners in America within recent years has been appalling and is startlingly on the increase. It has been presumed generally that railroading is the most hazardous of occupations, but statistics show that more miners per thousand engaged lose their lives in mines than railroad men. It is a matter of common knowledge that in a single month toward the end of 1907 1,000 miners lost their lives in three or four great mining disasters in various coal mines of the country.

"One of the most helpful results of the national establishment of schools or departments of mines and mining as proposed in this bill would be to teach safer methods of mining, so that the lives of miners might be more safe and property in mines more free from destruction. If the Government could do anything to safeguard the lives of miners who take their lives in their hands and go down into the depths of the earth to bring forth the minerals that are essential to civilization, surely it ought to be done. It is believed that, should such schools or departments be established, the next few years would show a welcome decrease in the death rate among miners. What is true in the way of making life safer in mines would also be true of protecting property in them, as the causes of explosions and other disasters incident to mining would be scientifically investigated and reduced to a minimum."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. STANDISH.

The bill (H. R. 17707) to authorize William H. Standish to construct a dam across James River, in Stone County, Mo., and divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the said river again to create electric power, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over, at the instance of the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

SOUTH PASS OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The bill (S. 6640) authorizing appropriations for South Pass of the Mississippi River, or surveys thereon, to be used in dredging said river above the pass to secure 35 feet and suitable width, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "that," to strike out "all moneys" and insert "so much as may be necessary of the moneys heretofore or hereafter," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much as may be necessary of the moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the maintenance of South Pass of the Mississippi River, or for examinations and surveys of the South Pass of the Mississippi River, or for the improvement of the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be used in dredging shoals in the said river between Cubits Gap and the Head of the Passes whenever it may become necessary to secure a depth of channel through said shoals of 35 feet, with a practicable width; said dredging to be done either by the dredges owned and operated by the United States, or, if necessary, under contract with responsible dredging companies, as may be most economical and advantageous to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY S. FERGUSSON.

The bill (S. 6529) for the relief of Mary S. Fergusson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Philippines with amendments, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine thousand" and insert "four thousand five hundred;" and in line 10, after the words "salary for," to strike out "one year" and insert "six months," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary S. Fergusson, the widow of Arthur W. Fergusson, late executive secretary of the Philippine Islands, who died January 30, 1908, in the service of the Government, the sum of $4,500, being the amount of salary for six months.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDAY CLOSING IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 3940) requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation in the District of Columbia, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, to labor at any trade or calling, or to employ or cause to be employed his apprentice or servant in any labor or business, except in household work or other work of necessity or charity, and except also newspapers publishers and their employees, and except also public-service corporations and their employees, in the necessary supplying of service to the people of the District.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person in said District on said day to engage in any circus, show, or theatrical performance: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not be construed so as to prohibit sacred concerts, nor the regular business of hotels and restaurants on said day; nor to the delivery of articles of food, including meats, at any time before 10 o'clock in the morning of said day from June 1 to October 1; nor to the sale of milk, fruit, confectionery, ice, soda, and mineral waters, newspapers, periodicals, cigars, drugs, medicines, and surgical appliances; nor to the business of livery stables, or other public, or the use of private conveyances; nor to the handling and operation of the United States mail.

SEC. 3. That any person or corporation who shall violate the provisions of this act shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $10 or by imprisonment in the jail of the District of Columbia for not more than ten days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That persons who are members of a religious society, who observe as a Sabbath any other day in the week than Sunday, shall not be liable to the penalties prescribed in this act if they observe as a Sabbath one day in each seven, as herein provided.

SEC. 4. That all prosecutions for violations of this act shall be in the police courts of the District of Columbia and in the name of the District.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to inquire whether it is a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is. I desire to offer an amendment. I move to strike out the proviso in section 3 and to add it to section 1, in just exactly the same language.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3 of the committee amendment, section 3, it is proposed to strike out the proviso and to add it at the end of section 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia."

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN NEVADA.

The bill (S. 6783) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Nevada was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Nevada, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point in the State, to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THIRD INSTALLMENT, MISSOURI WAR CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 6764) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT CRAWFORD MILITARY TRACT, WISCONSIN.

The bill (S. 4726) for the relief of certain purchasers of lots in the Fort Crawford military tract at Prairie du Chien, State of Wisconsin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in all cases where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the purchaser of a lot in the Fort Crawford military tract at Prairie du Chien, Crawford County, State of Wisconsin, has paid the interest required by law, the amount so paid for interest shall be repaid to the purchaser.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT CODE.

The bill (S. 6506) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia" was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 1071 by adding the following paragraph:

The record, in the District of Columbia, of any deed or other instrument of writing, not of a testamentary character, where the laws of the District of Columbia authorized the same to be recorded in said District and the same has been recorded agreeably to such laws, and the record in said District of any will or other instrument of writing of a testamentary character, where the laws of said District authorized the same to be admitted to probate and record in said District, by judicial decree, and the same has been so admitted to probate and record agreeably to such laws and (in case of such will or of such other instrument of writing of a testamentary character) of the decree of the court admitting the same to probate and record, shall be good and sufficient prima facie evidence to prove the existence and contents of such deed or will or other instrument of writing, and that it was executed as it purports to have been. And a copy of the same under the hand of the recorder of deeds or register of wills or other keeper of such record and the seal of the office or court in which such record has been made, shall also be good and sufficient prima facie evidence to prove the existence and contents of such deed or will or other instrument of writing, and that it was executed as it purports to have been.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMBASSY BUILDING, PARIS, FRANCE.

The bill (S. 6959) to provide for the purchase of building and grounds, or of a site and erection of a building thereon, in the city of Paris, France, for the use of the embassy of the United States, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator who introduced the bill is not present. There are Senators who want to be heard on it. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not insist that the bill go over.

Mr. TELLER. I know that one or two Senators want to be heard on the bill. I think it is rather important whether or not we shall adopt the policy therein announced, and if we are going to do it, we should take up the bill at some other time. I am compelled under the circumstances to object.

Mr. CULLOM. We can not take it up at this session unless we do so pretty soon. Of course the Senator has a right to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado objects, and the bill will go over.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The bill (S. 6102) to further protect the public health, and imposing additional duties upon the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 3, section 3, line 3, after the word "school," to insert "without compensation to or from the United States and," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That to facilitate cooperation between State and Territorial boards of health or departments of health, including the District of Columbia, and the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, there shall be established a school of hygiene, for which the facilities of the hygienic laboratory shall be available. Regulations for admission to and for the conduct of said school shall be made by the Surgeon-General with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. There shall be received in this school, without compensation to or from the United States and with such limitations as may be deemed necessary,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 4, line 15, after the word "annum," to strike out:

There shall also be appointed in like manner a solicitor of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, who shall be familiar with the public health laws of the National Government, States, and municipalities, to aid in establishing uniform measures for the protection of the public health and to perform such service of a legal nature as may be required. The salary of the solicitor shall be fixed by the Surgeon-General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall not exceed $5,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, section 5, line 12, after the word "days," to insert:

And provided further, That the health authorities of all the other States and Territories shall be notified of said special conference, and in their discretion may send delegates, one from each State or Territory, at their own expense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 6101) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 10, after the word "surgeons-general," to insert "or colonel;" in line 11, after the word "surgeons-general," to insert "or lieutenant-colonel;" on page 2, line 1, after the word "surgeons," to insert "or major," so as to read:

That hereafter the pay and allowances, including longevity, of the commissioned medical officers of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service shall be the same as the pay and allowances, including longevity and excepting forage, of the commissioned officers of the Medical Department of the Army, as follows: Surgeon-General, that of the Surgeon-General of the Army; assistant surgeons-general, that of assistant surgeons-general or colonel of the Army; ten medical directors, that of deputy surgeons-general or lieutenant-colonel of the Army; surgeons, that of surgeons or major of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That when any officer of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service shall be detailed for duty with the military or naval forces of the United States, under the provision of section 4 of the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency and change the name of the United States Marine-Hospital Service," he shall when on such duty be subject to the Rules and Articles of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 3, line 21, after the word "promotion," to insert "according to seniority," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That when any commissioned medical officer in the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service has reached the age of 64 years he shall, upon his own application or in the discretion of the President, be retired and his place on the active list shall be filled by promotion according to seniority.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. du PONT. I offer an amendment, to be inserted at the end of section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1 it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the total number of the commissioned medical officers of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service shall not exceed 150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INJURIOUS DEPOSITS IN NEW YORK WATERS.

The bill (S. 7023) to amend section 3 of the act of August 18, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," so as to provide safeguards to life on boats and scows, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether he thinks the bill will prevent the State of New York from creating a nuisance along the whole coast of New Jersey.

Mr. DEPEW. With the exception of an amendment contained in the bill, the measure is existing law.

Mr. KEAN. I trust the bill will prevent the city of New York from destroying property along the Jersey coast, and therefore I hope everything has been put into the bill that should be there to compel the city of New York to do its duty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. I do not.

Mr. DEPEW. The object of the bill is particularly to take care of the Jersey coast.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN OREGON.

The bill (S. 6788) to amend sections 2586 and 2587 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the acts of April 25, 1882, and August 28, 1890, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 3, line 23, after the word "fees" to strike out "and," and after the word "commissions" to insert "storage, and all perquisites of every name and nature," so as to read:

Fourth. In the district of Portland a collector, who shall receive a salary of $6,000 a year, including fees, commissions, storage, and all perquisites of every name and nature; and an appraiser, who shall receive a salary of $3,000 a year, both of whom shall reside at Portland, Oreg.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend sections 2586 and 2587 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the acts of April 25, 1882, and August 28, 1890, relating to collection districts in Oregon."

PROOF OF SIGNATURES AND HANDWRITING.

The bill (S. 608) relating to proof of signatures and handwriting was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in any court of the United States where the genuineness of the signature or handwriting of any person may be involved, any admitted or proved signature or handwriting of such person shall be competent as a basis for comparison to prove or disprove such genuineness.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT V. BELT AND JOSEPH P. MULLEN.

The bill (S. 4288) to empower the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of Robert V. Belt and Joseph P. Mullen for services and expenses for the Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 2, section 2, line 13, after the word "freedmen," to strike out "and the United States;" in line 14, after the word "freedmen," to strike out "and the United States;" and in line 17, after the word "who," to insert "with such attorney as said freedmen may select and employ," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the suits in said cases shall be begun by filing petitions in the Court of Claims within sixty days after the approval of this act, wherein shall be set out such facts and in the manner as prescribed by the rules of that court, by the said Robert V. Belt and Joseph P. Mullen, against the Choctaw freedmen in the one case and against the Chickasaw freedmen in the other case; service of said petitions shall be had by delivery of two copies of each to the Attorney-General, who, with such attorney as said freedmen may select and employ, shall appear and defend for all of the defendants in each of said cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 3, after the words "against the," to strike out "United States in the respective cases, said judgments to be certified to Congress as in other cases provided" and insert "individuals to whom such services were rendered," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the court may receive and consider all papers, documents, records, depositions, or other evidence offered by any of the parties to said suits; and for such amount, if any, as the court shall adjudged to be justly and equitably due to said attorneys, Robert V. Belt and Joseph P. Mullen, as the value of the services rendered and expenses incurred by them for and on behalf of the said Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen upon the evidence submitted it shall render judgment or decree against the individuals to whom such services were rendered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. OWEN. The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the report is No. 624.

Mr. KEAN. I do not seem to have it here. I wish the Senator from Oklahoma would explain the bill. It seems to be pretty broad.

Mr. OWEN. The bill is to provide a hearing in the case of Robert V. Belt and his associate, Mullen. Mullen was formerly Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and afterwards served these people and procured a consideration of their claims which led to their being allowed an allotment from the Chickasaw Nation. They have never been compensated, and have had nothing in the way of expenses or other considerations for the services rendered. The bill simply permits the court to consider their claim and find what, if anything, is due to them.

Mr. KEAN. It also provides for the finding of judgment, does it not?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. And the report of the claim to Congress.

Mr. OWEN. No; that was stricken out. It was amended so as to read "the individuals to whom such services were rendered."

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection, of course, to the individuals paying.

Mr. OWEN. That is all it provides. The words "the United States" were stricken out. The bill as first presented contained that provision, but it was amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICKASAW LANDS FOR TOWN SITES.

The bill (S. 5163) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to segregate for town sites certain lands belonging to the Chickasaw tribes, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in addition to the towns heretofore segregated, surveyed, and scheduled in accordance with law the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to segregate and survey, within that part of the territory of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, State of Oklahoma, heretofore segregated as coal and asphalt land, such other towns, parts of towns, or town lots as are now in existence or which he may deem it desirable to establish. He shall cause the surface of the lots in such towns or parts of towns to be appraised, scheduled, and sold at the rates, on the terms, and with the same character of estate as is provided in section 29 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 495), under regulations to be prescribed by him.

Section 2 provides that the provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 137), shall not apply to town lots appraised and sold as provided herein.

Section 3 provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lots in the town of Hartshorne, Choctaw Nation, State of Oklahoma, to be reappraised as of the date of original appraisal made by the town-site commission; that payments already made on lots therein shall be credited on the basis of reappraisal, and that payments not heretofore made on installments due or past due under the original appraisal shall be superseded by the amounts fixed under the new appraisal; and payments shall be due and date from thirty days after the service of notice of reappraisal.

Section 4 provides that all expenses incurred in surveying, platting, and selling the lots in any town or parts of towns or the reappraisal of any lots in any town heretofore appraised shall be paid from the proceeds of the sale of town lots of the nation in which such town is situated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT TO CERTAIN CHEROKEE CITIZENS.

The bill (S. 6930) to pay to certain Cherokee citizens moneys to which they have been found entitled by the Supreme Court was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury belonging to the Cherokee tribe of Indians, to those intermarried white citizens of the said Cherokee tribe placed on the final approved rolls of the said Cherokee tribe by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Daniel Red Bird against The United States, the share or shares to which they are entitled in the funds of the Cherokee Nation on account of payments heretofore made out of said Cherokee funds to members of the Cherokee Nation, but in which payments said intermarried white Cherokee citizens did not participate and to which they were entitled in accordance with the findings of the Supreme Court in the said case of Daniel Red Bird against The United States, said intermarried white Cherokee citizens having married into the Cherokee Nation prior to November 1, 1875, and not having since abandoned their citizenship. In case any of said intermarried Cherokee white citizens have died since final enrollment their share or shares in the money distributed shall be paid to their heirs or legal representatives, but the Cherokee Nation shall have authority to contest before the Secretary of the Interior the right of any person whose enrollment was made under the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Daniel Red Bird to receive such payments, and if said Secretary becomes convinced that such person was improperly enrolled he is hereby authorized to deny him the right to receive such back payments.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FUNDS OF OSAJE INDIANS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 67) empowering the Court of Claims to ascertain the amount of the "civilization fund" paid by the Osages and applied to the benefit of other Indians, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It confers jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to ascertain and determine the amount received by the United States from the sale of lands belonging to the Osage Indians under a treaty between the United States and the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians, proclaimed January 21, 1867, and credited to the "civilization fund," that has been expended for any other Indians, or for any purpose other than the benefit of the Osage Indians, and the amount so ascertained shall be placed to the credit of the Osage tribe of Indians in the United States Treasury; less fee for attorneys representing said tribe of Indians employed by virtue of the resolution of the Osage national council, passed on the 7th day of December, 1907, in such amount as the court shall ascertain and fix after proper hearing of the services rendered and expenses incurred in the prosecution of the claim aforesaid, and the amounts found due by the court for the purposes hereinbefore stated are hereby appropriated out of said fund.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN SCHOOL IN ARIZONA TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 6523) granting a patent for land to "The Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament for Indians and Colored People," a charitable corporation organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to "The Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament for Indians and Colored People," a charitable corporation organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, for and covering the following described lands, amounting to approximately 280 acres, now and for many years occupied by the said "The Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament for Indians and Colored People" as an Indian school, to wit: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 13, the south half of the northeast quarter of section 14, and the east half of the northwest quarter and the south half of the northeast quarter of section 24, all in township 26 north, range 30 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, on the Navajo Indian reservation in Arizona Territory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

The bill (S. 4316) to further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1903, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

DESECRATION OF THE FLAG.

The bill (S. 565) to prevent and punish the desecration, mutilation, or improper use of the flag of the United States of America was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BACON. I hope the bill may be read in such a way that we may know not simply as to the amendments, but in such consecutive way as to enable us to judge of the bill. I am opposed to the desecration of the flag. At the same time there may be some innocent uses of it which should not be denied.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that the bill as amended is almost an exact copy of the law of Connecticut and certain other States.

Mr. BACON. I am not objecting to it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Military Affairs reports to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That any person who, in any manner, for exhibition or display, puts or causes to be placed any inscription, picture, design, device, symbol, name, advertisement, words, characters, marks, or notice whatever upon any flag, standard, color, or ensign of the United States, or ensign evidently purporting to be such flag, standard, color, or ensign, or who in any manner appends, annexes, or affixes to any such flag, standard, color, or ensign, any inscription, picture, design, device, symbol, name, advertisement, words, marks, notice, or token, whatever, or who displays or exhibits or causes to be placed or exhibited any flag, standard, color, or ensign of the United States, or flag, standard, color, or ensign evidently purporting to be such flag, standard, color, or ensign upon which shall in any manner be put, attached, annexed, or affixed any inscription, picture, design, device, symbol, name, advertisement, words, marks, notice, or token whatever, or who publicly mutilates, tramples upon, or otherwise defaces or defiles any such flag, standard, color, or ensign, whether any such flag, standard, color, or ensign is public or private property, shall be fined not more than $100, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both, for each offense: Provided, however, That flags, standards, colors, or ensigns, the property of or used in the service of the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, may have inscriptions, names of actions, words, marks, or symbols which are placed thereon pursuant to law or authorized regulations.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—If I can have the attention of the Senator from Wyoming—I presume that none of us differ in the purposes that are in view in this legislation. At the same time it ought to be guarded in such a way as not to permit it to be abused.

I wish to state a case to the Senator from Wyoming, and ask him whether the provision of this bill would make the use of it unlawful, as I am about to narrate. Of course I can judge of the bill only imperfectly from the reading of it, but I want to give an illustration: There is in the town in which I live an organization of Confederate veterans, and they have a flag under which they march on all occasions, which is a blending of the United States flag and the Confederate States flag. The purpose that they have in that is manifest to all. Usually such organizations march only under the Confederate flag, and the purpose of blending the two flags is to show that while they are loyal and devoted to the memory of the deeds of themselves and of their fathers in the civil war and to the part they took in it, they are none the less loyal to the Union under which they now live and to which they are equally loyal and equally devoted.

That is the purpose in blending the two flags, and everyone will recognize that it is a most laudable and praiseworthy purpose. In its design it is a very beautiful flag, I will say to Senators, combining as it does the most striking features of each flag. In design and execution it is the most beautiful flag I ever saw—one made at very considerable expense, in silk, with gold ornamentation, and everything that art can tastefully apply to make it a beautiful flag. It is intended to symbolize and demonstrate a very beautiful sentiment—loyalty to the past and none the less loyalty to the present.

Now, will this bill, if it should be enacted into law, make that an unlawful flag to carry?

Mr. WARREN. I will say that I did not report the bill from the committee. It was reported by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and it was reported after a long series of consideration by that Senator and two other Senators in subcommittee. During the time a hearing was granted and there were hundreds of patriotic men and women, mostly the latter, who appeared before the subcommittee. A comparison was made between all the laws of the different States and this substitute was adopted.

I of course could not say offhand, even if I could say after more thorough examination, what might be the construction of the law as to this blended flag. If the Senator had the flag here, or if it was more definitely described we might know. Possibly Senators from the States where such laws have been in force for some years can answer that question. But I want to say, generally speaking, that any flag or any use of the flag, devoted to patriotic and loyal purposes would not be complained against, nor be proceeded against under the law. It is not the intent of the law to do that. But in the absence, first, of the blended flag itself or a description of it, and in the absence, second, of the application and precedents established heretofore, and I might say furthermore of my own ignorance as to the law in its possible future application, I am unable to answer categorically yes or no the question the Senator has propounded. Possibly the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] may be able to give the information.

Mr. BACON. I recognize the sentiment of course and the principle, I will say, which is back of such legislation, and I entirely sympathize with it. That legislation has been pronounced by the Supreme Court of the United States to be constitutional in a case which, I think, went up from Nebraska. I would not wish either to interfere with it or to appear to interfere with it.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, I want to say that the whole theory of the subcommittee and the general committee was to confine the act as closely as possible to the prevention of the willful desecration of the flag, and they selected, as I understand it, the law from one of the whole lot that would be the least, if I may use the word, offensive, and that might be the least apt to infringe upon right privileges that we did not seek to abridge in anyway. As I said, the Senator from Connecticut may be able to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. BACON. I fully understand the purpose expressed by the Senator. I approve the purpose thoroughly. The only question in my mind is whether they have entirely guarded everything so as to effectuate that purpose. I would not myself be willing to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. WARREN. I will take the liberty, if the Senator is not entirely satisfied, to ask that it shall go over until we can examine it, and it may be called up later to-day or on another occasion. If the Senator would like to have it go over, I will make the objection.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. If Senators will pardon me a moment, I was endeavoring to say simply that the Senator himself in looking at the bill might suggest an amendment which would not exclude any use of the flag which was recognized as patriotic and loyal or for a public purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BULKELEY. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was chairman of the subcommittee that had this matter in charge. In response to very urgent appeals from patriotic societies that some law might be passed to prevent an improper desecration, as it was called, of the flag of the United States, and after examining the various laws that had been adopted in the different States, the Senator from Massachusetts concluded that the measure as reported was the simplest and the most efficacious and free from objections that were raised against the bill originally presented.

Such a law has been in force in my own State for a number of years, and there has never been any fault found with its enforcement. It simply prevents what I think everybody concedes ought to be prevented, an improper use of the flag of our country by methods of advertising in one way and another. The bill is perfectly simple in that respect.

COMMODITY CLAUSE OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. DICK. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. FORAKER], who has offered a substitute for the pending joint resolution, and who because of illness is not able to be present in the Chamber, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the time for the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar be continued until 3 o'clock.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hardly think it will take that length of time until they can be disposed of.

Mr. WARREN. Let it be a sufficient time to conclude the Calendar.

Mr. CARTER. I think we can finish the Calendar of unobjected cases by 4 o'clock at any rate.

Mr. KEAN. We can probably finish it by 3.

Mr. CARTER. I do not wish a general unanimous-consent agreement which would preclude making a motion at any time during the session to proceed to the consideration of a bill. I will modify my request and ask unanimous consent that we continue to consider unobjected cases on the Calendar under Rule VIII until the hour of 4 o'clock, unless such cases shall have been previously disposed of.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not desire to interfere with the passage of any uncontested matters on the Calendar, but I had intended to move, at 2 o'clock, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Appalachian forest-reserve bill. I have no objection to a unanimous-consent agreement to continue with the Calendar for such time as is necessary to pass the uncontested matters, with the understanding that I may have unanimous consent at the end of that time to move to take up the bill I have indicated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the Senate continue the consideration of unobjected bills upon the Calendar under Rule VIII until 4 o'clock, unless such cases shall have been sooner disposed of. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask the Senator if he modifies his request by agreeing to my suggestion?

Mr. CARTER. I may perchance desire to move a substitute for the bill the Senator contemplates calling up for consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. We are unable to hear on this side of the Chamber the conversation between the two Senators.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course I can not control the action of the Senator from Montana on any amendment or substitute he intends to move to the bill I spoke of. I simply asked him to agree that I may move that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill. Then he can vote the way he has a mind to on it.

Mr. CARTER. To be perfectly frank with the Senator, I expect to move to proceed to the consideration of the postal savings-bank bill just as soon as the present order is disposed of, if unanimous consent shall be granted to consider unobjected cases further.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, to be equally frank and perfectly courteous to the Senator, I shall have to object to his request for unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will let us proceed with the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us go on and finish the Calendar.

Mr. McCREARY. Yes; under rule VIII.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CARTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. PILES. I suggest that unanimous consent be asked—

Mr. BACON. Senators on the other side of the Chamber fail to realize that on this side of the Chamber, unless they raise their voices, it is impossible to hear what they say, even when there is no confusion in the hall.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, for the benefit of the Senator from Georgia who could not hear—

Mr. BACON. No; it is not for the benefit of the Senator from Georgia, it is for the benefit of all on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. CARTER. I will modify my observation so as to include all Senators on the other side.

Mr. President, the situation seems to be this: I asked unanimous consent for a continuation of the consideration of unobjected cases until the hour of 4 o'clock unless such unobjected cases should in the meantime be disposed of. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] sought to have unanimous consent embrace an agreement to proceed to the consideration of another bill at the conclusion of the unobjected cases. I can not accept that qualification, and therefore the objection of the Senator from Connecticut obtains as against the continuation of unobjected cases on the Calendar.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will withdraw the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn, and without objection unanimous consent is given—

Mr. TELLER. What is the suggestion now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the Senate shall continue with the consideration of unobjected bills upon the Calendar under Rule VIII until the hour of 4 o'clock unless the unobjected bills are disposed of in the meantime.

Mr. KEAN. In the same way that we have been proceeding?

Mr. TELLER. Under the same terms we have been proceeding?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes; without objection, it is so ordered.

DESECRATION OF THE FLAG.

Mr. WARREN. As I am about to leave the Chamber to join a conference, I ask that the bill (S. 565) to prevent and punish the desecration, mutilation, or improper use of the flag of the United States of America may lie over and we will undertake to consider it after the return of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] at some later day. I do not understand that there is any objection to the bill. It is simply to ascertain the effect of certain terms in it.

Mr. BACON. As the suggestion probably grows out of remarks which I have made, I desire to say that I will fully cooperate with the Senator from Wyoming and other Senators in the purpose that it shall be considered, and that we shall take occasion to consider it as soon as the Senator from Massachusetts returns.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PORTO RICO PROVISIONAL REGIMENT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am called to a public duty in another place and will not be here during further consideration of the Calendar. I therefore ask that the bill (H. R. 18618) fixing the status of the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, may go over under Rule IX, as I do not desire to have it considered at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Wyoming. The Secretary will state the next bill on the Calendar.

JOHN F. WINGFIELD.

The bill (S. 5944) for the relief of John F. Wingfield was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John F. Wingfield, for transporting the mail on route No. 4174, in Virginia, from January 1, to March 31, 1861, the sum of $50.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NESTLER BREWING COMPANY.

The bill (S. 6373) waiving the statute of limitations as to the claim of the Nestler Brewing Company, and authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to adjudicate the same, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to extend the time within which the Nestler Brewing Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah, or its agents or legal representatives, may file a claim for the redemption of revenue stamps for a period of ninety days from and after the approval of this act, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of May 12, 1900, amended by the act of June 30, 1902; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to consider and adjudicate said claim upon its merits, notwithstanding any prior determination thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. KELLY.

The bill (S. 6923) for the relief of John M. Kelly was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $2,048.70 to John M. Kelly, successor to Kelly & Hart, of New Orleans, La., the same being the balance due for dredging in Garden Key, channel at Dry Tortugas, Fla., under contract with the United States, dated January 23, 1901.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MARSHALL, MO.

The bill (S. 4691) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Marshall, in the State of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of governmental offices in the city of Marshall and State of Missouri, the cost of the site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DECORATION AND DIPLOMA TO MAJ. C. DE W. WILCOX.

The bill (S. 5989) authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Capt. C. De W. Wilcox decoration and diploma presented by Government of France was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "Captain" and insert "Major," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Maj. C. De W. Wilcox, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the decoration and diploma of Officier d'Académie tendered to him, through the Department of State of the United States, by the Government of the French Republic; and the Department of State is hereby authorized to deliver to him the said decoration and diploma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Maj. C. De W. Wilcox decoration and diploma presented by Government of France."

INDIAN LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

The bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restrictions on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the word "to," to insert "adult;" in the same line, after the word "the," to strike out "various" and insert "following;" in line 7, after the word "except," to strike out "as to 40 acres" and insert "a homestead of 120 acres;" in line 8, after the word "Miami," to strike out "Ottawa;" in line 10, after the word "to," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "a homestead of 40;" on page 2, line 2, before the word "Reservation," to strike out "in the Modoc" and insert "for each member of the Ottawa tribe on the Ottawa;" in line 3, after the word "may," to insert "upon application of any adult member of either of said tribes;" in line 14, after the word "allottee," to insert "for any part of his surplus lands;" and in the same line, after the word "to," to strike out "the expiration of sixty days from the passage of this act" and insert "January 1, 1909," and at the end of the section to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue patents in fee to all religious societies and organizations, severally, for the lands occupied by them within any of said reservations and heretofore reserved to such societies as shown on approved schedules of allotments.

So as to make the section read:

That from and after sixty days from the passage of this act all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation on lands allotted to adult members of the following tribes of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., are hereby removed, except a homestead of 120 acres of each allotment in the Quapaw, Peoria, Miami, Eastern Shawnee, Wyandot, and Seneca reservations and except as to a homestead of 40 acres for each member of the Ottawa tribe on the Ottawa Reservation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, upon application of any adult member of either of said tribes, in his discretion, and he is hereby authorized, whenever he shall be satisfied that any allottee of said agency is competent and capable of managing his or her affairs at any time, to cause to be issued to such allottee a patent in fee simple for such portion of his or her allotment hereby reserved from sale, incumbrance, or taxation, and thereafter all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said land covered by such fee-simple patent shall be removed: Provided further, That any sale, incumbrance, or contract for sale or incumbrance made or entered into by or on behalf of any allottee for any part of his surplus lands prior to January 1, 1909, or prior to the issuance of such fee-simple patent shall be absolutely null and void: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue patents in fee to all religious societies and organizations, severally, for the lands occupied by them within any of said reservations and heretofore reserved to such societies as shown on approved schedules of allotments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, after the word "agency," to insert "except members of the Modoc tribe;" on page 3, in line 4, after the word "allotment," to insert "for use as a homestead, which said homestead is;" in line 6, after the word "and," to strike out "file" and insert "a description of the reserved land shall be filed;" and in line 8, after the word "agency," to strike out "a description thereof," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That within sixty days after the passage of this act each allottee of the Quapaw Agency, except members of the Modoc tribe, the father, and in case of no father then the mother, and in case of no father or mother then the legal guardian, acting for the minor child, shall select the portion of each allotment for use as a homestead, which said homestead is hereby reserved from sale, incumbrance, or taxation, and a description of the reserved land shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or the officer in charge of said agency: Provided, That if no such selection shall be made as above provided then the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such selection for and in behalf of any allottee, and such selection when so made shall be conclusive evidence that such land is reserved from alienation, incumbrance, or taxation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 24, after the word "purposes," to insert "and not otherwise disposed of," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell all the tribal lands within the jurisdiction of the Quapaw Agency, and all agency, school, or other Government buildings on any reservation within the jurisdiction of said agency, at public auction or by sealed bids, under such regulations as he may prescribe; and he is hereby authorized to convey all lands so sold to the purchaser thereof by patents in fee. And all lands within such agency which have heretofore been reserved for agency, school, or other purposes, and not otherwise disposed of, shall, on approval of this act, revert to the tribe within whose reservation the lands are located and be sold as tribal lands as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 9, to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the rolls of the Klamath Agency, in Oregon, those Modoc Indians now enrolled at the Quapaw Agency, in Oklahoma, formerly Indian Territory, together with their descendants living at the date of the passage of this act, and that upon the removal of any of said Indians to the Klamath Reservation, in Oregon, they shall be allotted as other Indians on said reservation, and that upon the passage of this act they be accorded all the rights and privileges of other Indians enrolled at the Klamath Agency: Provided, That for the purposes of such removal the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, all lands inherited and otherwise heretofore allotted to the members of said tribe in Oklahoma, and he is authorized to issue a patent in fee simple to the purchaser or purchasers of said lands, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, and taxation of said land shall thereupon be removed: Provided, That no action shall be taken under this section until a majority of the adult members of said Modoc tribe shall consent to such action, said consent to be given in an open council, at a meeting called for the purpose of passing upon the terms of this section, the date and place of such council to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CAPT. CHARLES E. MORTON.

The bill (H. R. 17056) for the relief of Capt. Charles E. Morton, Sixteenth United States Infantry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Capt. Charles E. Morton, Sixteenth United States Infantry, $186, to reimburse him for the sum of $186 United States currency stolen from him, without fault or neglect on his part, while he was first lieutenant, Sixteenth United States Infantry, and acting disbursing officer at Echague, province of Isabela, Luzon, Philippine Islands, and which sum he has since paid into the Treasury of the United States in discharge of his liability as such disbursing officer.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21871) to amend the national banking laws.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any national banking association which has circulating notes outstanding, secured by the deposit of United States bonds to an amount of not less than 50 per cent of its capital stock, and which has a surplus of not less than 20 per cent, may make application to the Comptroller of the Currency for authority to issue additional circulating notes to be secured by the deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States. The Comptroller of the Currency shall transmit immediately the application, with his recommendation, to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, if in his judgment business conditions in the locality demand additional circulation, approve the same, and shall determine the time of issue and fix the amount, within the limitations hereinafter imposed, of the additional circulating notes to be issued. In order that the distribution of notes to be issued under the provisions of this act shall be made as equitable as practicable between the various sections of the country, the Secretary of the Treasury shall not approve applications from associations in any State in excess of the amount to which such State would be entitled of the additional notes herein authorized on the basis of the proportion which the unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations in such State bears to the total amount of unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations of the United States: Provided, however, That in case the applications from associations in any State shall not be equal to the amount which the associations of such State would be entitled to under this method of distribution, the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, to meet an emergency, assign the amount not thus applied for to any applying association or associations in States in the same section of the country. Whenever after receiving notice of such approval any such association shall deposit with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States such of the bonds described in section 2 of this act as shall be approved in character and amount by the Treasurer of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be entitled to receive, upon the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, equal in amount to 90 per cent of the market value, but not in excess of the par value of any bonds so deposited, such market value to be ascertained and determined under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, such additional circulating notes to be used, held, and treated in the same way as circulating notes of national banking associations heretofore issued and secured by a deposit of United States bonds, and shall be subject to all the provisions of law affecting such notes: Provided, That the total amount of circulating notes outstanding of any national banking association, including notes secured by United States bonds as now provided by law, and notes secured by other bonds as provided by this act, shall not at any time exceed the amount of its unimpaired capital and surplus: And provided further, That there shall not be outstanding at any time additional circulating notes issued under the provisions of this act to an amount of more than $500,000,000.

SEC. 2. That the Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall accept as security for the additional circulating notes provided for in the preceding section, bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of any State of the United States, or any legally authorized bonds issued by any city, town, county, or other legally constituted municipality or district in the United States which has been in existence for a period of ten years, and which for a period of ten years previous to such deposit has not defaulted in the payment of any part of either principal or interest of any funded debt authorized to be contracted by it, and whose net funded indebtedness does not exceed 10 per cent of the valuation of its taxable property, to be ascertained by the last preceding valuation of property for the assessment of taxes. The Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall accept, for the purposes of this act, securities herein enumerated in such proportions as he may from time to time determine, and he may with such approval at any time require the deposit of additional securities, or require any association to change the character of the securities already on deposit. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain information with reference to the value and character of the securities authorized to be accepted under the provisions of this section, and he shall from time to time furnish information to national banking associations as to such bonds as would be acceptable as security under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That the legal title of all bonds, whether coupon or registered, deposited to secure circulating notes issued in accordance with the terms of this act shall be transferred to the Treasurer of the United States in trust for the association depositing them, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. A receipt shall be given to the association by the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, stating that such bond is held in trust for the association on whose behalf the transfer is made, and as security for the redemption and payment of any circulating notes that have been or may be delivered to such association. No assignment or transfer of any such bond by the Treasurer shall be deemed valid unless countersigned by the Comptroller of the Currency. The provisions of sections 5103, 5104, 5105, 5106, 5107, and sections 5224 to 5234, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes respecting United States bonds deposited to secure circulating notes shall, except as herein modified, be applicable to all bonds deposited under the terms of this act.

SEC. 4. That section 5214 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5214. National banking associations having on deposit bonds of the United States bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, including the bonds issued for the construction of the Panama Canal, under the provisions of section 8 of 'An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans,' approved June 28, 1902, to secure its circulating notes, shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds; and such associations having on deposit bonds of the United States bearing interest at a rate higher than 2 per cent per annum shall pay a tax of one-half per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds. National banking associations having on deposit bonds to secure their circulating notes other than bonds of the United States shall pay for the first four months a monthly tax of one-half of 1 per cent upon the average amount of such of their notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds, and afterwards a monthly tax of three-quarters of 1 per cent upon the average amount of said notes in circulation. Every national banking association having outstanding circulating notes secured by a deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States shall make monthly returns, under oath of its president or cashier, to the Treasurer of the United States, in such form as the Treasurer may prescribe, of the average monthly amount of its notes so secured in circulation. The taxes received on circulating notes secured by bonds other than bonds of the United States shall be paid into the Division of Redemption of the Treasury and credited to the reserve fund held for the redemption of United States and other notes."

SEC. 5. That section 9 of the act approved July 12, 1882, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1907, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any national banking association desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, secured by deposit of United States bonds in the manner provided in section 4 of the act approved June 20, 1874, is hereby authorized for that purpose to deposit lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States and, with the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to withdraw a proportionate amount of bonds held as security for its circulating notes in the order of such deposits: Provided, That not more than $9,000,000 of lawful money shall be so deposited during any calendar month for this purpose.

"Any national banking association desiring to withdraw any of its circulating notes, secured by the deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States, may make such withdrawal at any time in like manner and effect by the deposit of lawful money or national bank notes with the Treasurer of the United States, and upon such deposit a proportionate share of the bonds so deposited may be withdrawn: Provided, That the deposits under this section to retire notes secured by the deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States shall not be covered into the Treasury, as required by section 6 of an act entitled 'An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes,' approved July 14, 1890, but shall be retained in the Treasury for the purpose of redeeming the notes of the bank making such deposit."

SEC. 6. That section 5172 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5172. In order to furnish suitable notes for circulation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved, in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting, and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom, and numbered, such quantity of circulating notes, in blank, of the denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000, as may be required to supply the associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall state upon their face that they will be redeemed by the United States in lawful money upon presentation at the Treasury. This pledge shall be certified by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register, and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury. They shall also express upon their face the promise of the association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the signature of the president or vice-president and cashier. The Comptroller of the Currency, acting under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall as soon as practicable cause to be prepared circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned, as provided by law, to an amount equal to 50 per cent of the capital stock of each national banking association; such notes to be deposited in the Treasury or in the subtreasury of the United States nearest the place of business of each association, and to be held for such association, subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, for their delivery as provided by law."

SEC. 7. That circulating notes of national banking associations, when presented to the Treasury for redemption, as provided in section 3 of the act approved June 20, 1874, shall be redeemed in lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 8. That the provisions of section 5191 of the Revised Statutes, with reference to the reserves of national banking associations, shall not apply to deposits of public moneys by the United States in designated depositories.

SEC. 9. That all acts and orders of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Treasurer of the United States authorized by this act shall have the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 10. That all national banking associations designated as regular depositories of public money shall pay upon all special and additional deposits made by the Secretary of the Treasury in such depositories, and all such associations designated as temporary depositories of public money shall pay upon all sums of public money deposited in such associations interest at such rate as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, not less, however, than 1 per cent per annum upon the average monthly amount of such deposits: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to change or modify the obligation of any association or any of its officers for the safe-keeping of public money: Provided further, That the rate of interest charged shall be equal and uniform throughout the United States.

SEC. 11. That a commission is hereby created, to be called the "National Monetary Commission," to be composed of nine members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer thereof, and nine Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof.

SEC. 12. That it shall be the duty of this Commission to inquire into and report to Congress what changes are necessary or desirable in the monetary system of the United States or in the laws relating to banking, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recess of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem desirable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such secretaries, experts, stenographers, messengers, and other assistants as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes for which said Commission was created. The Commission shall have the power, through subcommittee or otherwise, to examine witnesses and to make such investigations and examinations, in this or other countries, of the subjects committed to their charge as they shall deem necessary.

SEC. 13. That a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of sections 11 and 12 of this act, and to pay the necessary expenses of the Commission, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I will ask if it is proposed to have action this afternoon on the amendment which has just been read?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCREARY. Is that a bill which was reported from the Committee on Finance to-day?

Mr. ALDRICH. It was reported to-day.

Mr. McCREARY. And does the Senator from Rhode Island propose to have action now, without having the bill printed or giving us time to know what is contained in the amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment is in print and it has been read. The action of the Finance Committee in reporting the bill this morning was unanimous.

Mr. McCREARY. Is this a substitute for the House bill which passed that body yesterday?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a substitute for the House bill, and it is absolutely necessary that it should be passed promptly, unless this session is to be prolonged.

Mr. McCREARY. I was going to ask why this unusual haste in pushing the bill through?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is desired to get the bill passed so that it can go into conference to see whether it is possible to secure any action at this session of Congress.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if it was the understanding of the committee that action would be taken to-day?

Mr. ALDRICH. It was understood that action to-day was necessary to be taken if we were to finally dispose of the matter at this session. The state of the public business is such that it is absolutely necessary that prompt action shall be taken.

Mr. CULBERSON. Was it assented to by the minority of the committee?

Mr. ALDRICH. It was assented to by the minority members of the committee.

Mr. MONEY. I can speak for the members of the minority, Mr. President, if necessary. This bill is a substitute for the Vreeland bill. It is really the Aldrich bill, with some slight amendments. The action was assented to by the Democrats on the committee, the minority, who voted unanimously to report the bill to-day and also to ask for prompt action, which is necessary in order to get the bill into conference. It is a matter that can be considered in conference. There is nothing here which has not been printed.

Mr. McCREARY. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. Is it understood that the Democrats on the committee, the minority of the Committee on Finance, were in favor of this bill?

Mr. MONEY. The minority of the committee voted in favor of reporting it out, and I suppose the minority of the Senate—I know I will—will vote to substitute the Aldrich bill for the Vreeland bill; and then, if it comes to a vote, I shall vote against the Aldrich bill or any other bill of the sort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I simply rise to state that while I regard the so-called "Aldrich bill" as preferable to the Vreeland bill, and I make no objection to the substitution, I am opposed to the passage by the Senate of the Aldrich bill as amended in this report from the Committee on Finance, because I regard it as far more objectionable than the original Aldrich bill itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the amendment be ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island whether any amendment proposed reaches the question of the reserves of national banks?

Mr. ALDRICH. It does not, Mr. President. This bill provides for the appointment of a commission to take up all questions pertaining to banking; and the understanding of the committee is that that commission will take up that question and report some measure regulating it in the shape of an amendment to the present law. The action to be taken now merely sends the bill to conference.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, as I understand, the original Aldrich bill did contain a provision regarding reserves.

Mr. ALDRICH. That has not been included in the present bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I want to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether the conference between the Senate and the House would embrace any question regarding reserves, so that the conference committee may report to both bodies a substitute for either bill covering the question of reserves?

Mr. ALDRICH. It certainly would. The House bill contains a provision regulating the reserves of all national banks, and it will be perfectly competent for the managers of the conference to report such a provision if they shall see fit to do so.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he would not regard the action of the Senate in passing the Aldrich bill in the modified form now proposed as a practical instruction from the Senate not to insist upon the reserve clause in the original bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. The conferees on the part of the Senate would not consider themselves instructed at all, unless there should be such an expression of opinion on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. Probably, Mr. President, I ought not to use the word "instruct," but would not the Senator and the other conferees on the part of the Senate regard this last suggestion as the authoritative expression of the Senate, which does not include a reserve provision?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not the final and authoritative action of the Senate by any manner of means. This action sends the whole question to conference. I think the Senate can certainly trust the conferees who will be appointed, and the Senate will certainly have an opportunity to act upon the matter later on.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I regard the question of the relation of reserves to deposits and of capital and surplus to loans as of very much more importance than the creation of an emergency currency, and I trust that the committee of conference will take up these two questions fully and exhaustively. The great difficulty with the banking situation of three or four months ago was that the banks did not have on hand a sufficient amount of cash reserves to meet the checks of their depositors. The difficulty was with the State banks, rather than with the national banks. The statistics show that, on the average, the national banks had a cash reserve of about 18 per cent, whilst the State banks of the country had on hand a cash reserve not exceeding 5 per cent. It is utter folly, Mr. President, in my judgment, to attempt to inaugurate a safe system of banking unless we bring the State banking system into harmony with the national banking system so far as the requirements regarding reserves and capital are concerned. I have contended throughout that it was the duty of Congress not only to see to it that the national banks kept within their vaults an adequate proportion of the cash reserves required by law, but that, in the interest of interstate and foreign commerce, clearly within the regulation and control of the nation, we should so legislate as to prevent State banks engaged in interstate and foreign commerce from maintaining a system which not only imperiled the safety of their banks as financial institutions, but imperiled the safety of the entire national banking system of the country, for we may perfect our national banking system to the highest degree, yet if the State banking system be insufficient in the security offered to depositors, the danger of the State banks will affect the national banks, for depositors do not discriminate as between them—a panic is never logical—and when depositors in State banks become alarmed, the depositors in national banks, however secure they may be, also become alarmed.

The difficulty with the measure thus far considered by the Senate has been that it simply provides an emergency currency to meet the contingency of a panic when the panic is on and public apprehension is aroused. Our attention ought to be directed to so securing depositors in the matter of the capital of the banks and in the matter of reserves as against their deposits as to make a panic absolutely impossible.

NATIONAL CLEARING-HOUSE ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. President, the bill coming from the other House adopts one wise provision, which has been the evolution of experience, and that is the legalization of clearing-house associations as a part of the national-bank system. These clearing-house associations have thus far been voluntary associations created by the banks themselves, partly national and partly State. They have been organized for mutual convenience and for mutual protection. We have found that it is absolutely necessary for these banks to get together in times of panic through their clearing-house associations, and thus restore public confidence by giving aid to individual banks whose financial safety was imperiled. The House bill very wisely, it seems to me, creates these associations, legalizes them, and makes them the instrumentalities through which the emergency circulation is distributed. That provision is the result of an experience of years, and it has been demonstrated that it is a wise method of meeting these great emergencies.

The Senate Committee on Finance have an opportunity to approve of this provision legalizing the national-bank clearing-house associations, and they can make such associations the agency for securing safety in the State banks as well as in the national banks.

There is not a State bank in the country that will not want to become a member of a national clearing-house association if that association has the power of issuing emergency money. If it applies for admission, the nation, the creator of these clearing-house associations, can attach conditions to the admission, and those conditions should be that the State banks should keep the same reserves in their vaults that are required of the national banks and that their capital should have the same relation to their loans as is required or should be required under proper law—and I hope the Finance Committee will cover that—as is required or should be required of the national banks.

Such measure is simply persuasive; it is not coercive of the State; though, believing as I do, in the full power of the nation over interstate and foreign commerce, I would not hesitate to support a bill that would compel State banks, in the interest of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide such safety appliances for finance as the nation applies to State roads regarding interstate transportation. But here we have an opportunity by simple persuasion to induce State banks to comply with the national-bank requirements as to reserves and as to capital.

But it may be said that it will not do to make this change suddenly, because the national banks will then be compelled either to largely increase their reserves of gold and of lawful money, or they will be compelled to diminish their loans in order to bring their loans within the legal requirements of the provisions regarding their relation to reserves. It would, of course, be impossible in a day or in a week or in a month or in a year to secure to all the banks of the country an actual reserve, an average of even 20 per cent, for, in order to sustain the volume of bank loans which prevailed at the time of the panic, it would be necessary to have a cash reserve of at least $2,000,000,000 in all of our banks, national and State, whereas, as a matter of fact, we had only $1,000,000,000.

But this change can be brought about gradually, and it can be brought about by providing in this law that the banks shall be compelled to keep a certain proportion of their cash reserves in their own vaults—an increased amount—and that the State banks that become members of these associations shall similarly comply with that provision; and we should provide that it shall be gradually brought about, within a period of five years, under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency, so that the banks will have ample time largely to increase their reserves in order to sustain the existing volume of bank loans and to meet the requirements of the future with reference to increased bank loans.

INCREASED USE OF SILVER.

Mr. President, there is another question which presents itself, and that is that though we may give these banks five years, or even ten years, to bring their reserves up to the requirements of the law, they will find it difficult to accomplish it if they are compelled to resort only to the existing stock of gold or the production of gold in the future. The world is struggling for gold to-day in almost as great a degree as it did ten years ago, because all the agencies of business and of enterprise have been multiplied. Properties have largely increased in quantity and value. Subjects of exchanges have largely increased in value and number, and a greater number of units of money is required because of the increasing population of the world and the increased demands of business.

It would be wise therefore to provide that the national banks should utilize something else than gold in this endeavor to increase their reserves to an amount necessary to their security and their safety. To-day we have only one billion and a half of gold in the entire country, and one billion of that is in the banks. In order to sustain the existing volume of bank loans, the banks ought to have $2,000,000,000 of gold in their vaults.

At all events, we can gradually draw the extra half billion of gold from the pockets of the people, where it is used as current money of exchange, into the reserves of the banks, where it will stand as the basis of bank loans. That we can accomplish. How? By simply authorizing the banks to take silver bullion to the Treasury and receive in return for it limited-tender notes for an amount not exceeding $50, and these limited-tender notes when substituted for the gold that is now in the pockets of the people and in the tills of shops and business houses of the country would serve just as useful a purpose as money of mere exchange in ordinary transactions in life where money actually passes from man to man as gold itself. And thus gradually the banks can draw into their reserves $500,000,000 of gold, now amongst the people, and used as the common money of exchange, and make it the basis of bank loans.

Five hundred millions more of gold taken out of the pockets of the people and out of the tills of the commercial houses of the country and put in the banks will have an efficiency in exchange of five times that amount, because for every dollar of gold the banks can issue five dollars of credit, those credits being made efficient, being written upon the books of the banks and checked against by the new depositors.

THOROUGHGOING LEGISLATION NEEDS.

Mr. President, the treatment of this question by the Finance Committee has been simply skin-deep. They have never reached the real question. It is palliative treatment. It is not a radical cure. There is but one way of making these banks safe, and that is to provide for an average reserve of all the banks, national and State, of at least 20 per cent, but providing for it gradually and without wrenching too seriously existing conditions of finance.

The banking system can never be safe until by law the relation of capital and loans is established so that there can not exist such a condition of things that a bank with $1,000,000 of capital can accept $50,000,000 of deposits and loan the $50,000,000—almost the entire money—to customers, the security in capital thus being only 2 per cent.

The Senator from Rhode Island, in answer to an interrogatory that I put to him when the question was last before the Senate, said that the old State banks regarded the safe relation of capital to loans as one to two and a half. There should be a provision of law that no bank should be permitted to loan its depositors' money to an amount more than five times exceeding its capital and surplus. Whenever it reaches that point, it should cease loaning, and it must keep its depositors' money in its vaults, where it will be responsive to their demands. If you provide that the banks shall have an average reserve of 20 per cent in lawful money and a capital of at least 20 per cent of their permitted loans, then you have, in addition to the securities in which the depositors' money is invested, the actual cash reserve on hand subject to their check, and you have an additional security of 20 per cent in the shape of bank capital and surplus. Thus the depositor has a security of 40 per cent in addition to the security in which his money is invested. Whenever you organize a banking system of this kind, it will simply follow the rules of safe financing and safe banking throughout the world, rules which until recent years prevailed in this country and in the safest States in the Union, and notably in New York State. Until you do that, you will never have a safe system of banking, however you may increase this panic money, this emergency money, that is intended simply to relieve, after an unnecessary panic has been created, the apprehension of depositors as to their security. Such apprehension should be guarded against not by Government guaranty of deposits, but by compelling the banks to have sufficient capital and sufficient reserves to give the depositors absolute security, so that their apprehensions and fears will not be aroused.

I hope the Finance Committee will take under consideration, when this matter goes into conference, certain resolutions which I have presented to-day and which I intended to present as instructions to the Finance Committee in reporting this bill to the Senate. It was my purpose to cover these questions and to have a vote of the Senate, if possible, instructing the Finance Committee to shape these amendments which I have suggested and to present them to the Senate for its action upon the House bill. So far as I am concerned, I would rather build up on the House bill with its clearing-house provisions than I would on the Senate bill.

I ask that the resolution previously submitted by me to-day be appended to my remarks.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Finance Committee be instructed to report amendments to House bill No. 21871, amending the banking act, as follows: "First. An amendment providing that three-fourths of the reserves in reserve city and country banks shall be kept in their vaults, the change to be made gradually within a period of five years under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency.

"Second. An amendment providing that no bank shall make loans of its depositors' money to an amount exceeding five times its capital and surplus, the change to be made gradually within a period of five years under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency.

"Third. An amendment permitting State commercial banks to become members of national clearing-house associations, provided they submit to the regulations of the national-bank act regarding their capital and reserves and subject themselves to examination under the national-bank act.

"Fourth. An amendment providing a method by which clearing-house associations may avail themselves, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the use of additional silver as a limited legal tender for debts not exceeding $50, with a view to substituting such silver or the certificates representing it for full legal-tender money, gold or United States notes, now in circulation and outside of bank reserves, in order to increase the amount of gold and full legal-tender notes in such reserves as a basis for bank credits; the amendment to limit the amount of such issue of silver.

"Fifth. An amendment providing that the presidents of the clearing-house associations shall meet annually in Washington and shall select nine commissioners, one from each of the judicial circuits of the United States, who shall represent them at Washington as members of a banking commission, of which the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be, respectively, the chairman and secretary; the duties of the commission to be advisory to the Presdent, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to Congress; and such commission to be charged with the duty of considering and recommending changes in the banking act and methods for promoting and improving interstate and international exchange."

Mr. BACON. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Rhode Island. If I understand him correctly, there is in the substitute reported by the committee a provision for the appointment of a commission.

Mr. ALDRICH. A commission of nine Senators and nine Members of the House.

Mr. BACON. That is the point. The commission is limited to members of the Senate and of the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. Members of the Senate and of the House. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] desires to address the Senate on this question; but I take it the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill will afford that opportunity when the bill comes back on the conference report.

Mr. ALDRICH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BAILEY. With that understanding, I am ready for the vote.

Mr. GORE. Are amendments to the bill in order?

Mr. ALDRICH. The question is on the third reading of the bill. The amendments have been agreed to, I think. The bill has passed the stage of amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has passed beyond the point where amendments are in order.

Mr. GORE. Will it reach that point again?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not now.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think that can be done.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to present an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to present an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to know what the amendment is.

Mr. GORE. I will state that it is the body of the bill (S. 5508) to establish a system of postal savings banks, and for other purposes, introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall have to object to that. The bill was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CULBERSON. On the question of the passage of the bill as reported from the Committee on Finance I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PILES (when Mr. ANKENY's name was called). My colleague is ill and is unable to be present.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is necessarily detained from the Chamber. I transfer it to the Senator from Washington [Mr. ANKENY] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. I transfer it to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. MILTON's name was called). The Senator from Florida [Mr. MILTON] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DICK. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FORAKER]. If he were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. BAILEY (after having voted in the negative). I have voted, but I desire to inquire whether the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] is recorded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is not recorded.

Mr. BAILEY. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I think I ought to withdraw my vote. I voted "nay," and if my vote could stand, of course I would leave it as it has been recorded, but, owing to the absence of the Senator, I withdraw it.

Mr. BACON. My colleague [Mr. CLAY] is absent from the Chamber, serving upon a conference committee. He is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Were he present and at liberty to vote my colleague would vote "nay."

I desire furthermore to announce by request that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] is necessarily absent from the Chamber, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. If the Senator from Florida were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "nay."

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state, on the authority of the Senator from Florida, that if he were present he would vote "yea." That is the way he informed me this morning. However, it will make no difference in the result.

Mr. BACON. Not at all, but I wish to state to the Senator the ground upon which I made the announcement.

The Senator from Florida, when he left the Chamber, asked me to make the announcement, and while not specifically mentioning the bill, he did put himself in a position where I was authorized here to make the announcement I did. I was informed by one of his colleagues on the Finance Committee that if present he would vote "nay." But in view of the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island, I feel some delicacy about it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Florida himself is my authority for the statement I made.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest, although I have had no conference with the Senator from Florida, that between this measure and the House bill the Senator from Florida would favor this bill.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. All the Democrats on the committee did that. But as to the bill itself I imagine the Senator from Georgia is right about the position of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to make one word of explanation, as perhaps I am responsible for the situation. I understood that the Senator from Florida had voted for the Aldrich bill, but that he would vote against the whole business. I must have made a mistake. I am quite sure the chairman of the committee has a better understanding of it than I have.

Mr. BACON. His vote is not recorded in any event, and I will simply change the announcement to the extent of saying he is paired. I desire that the colloquy shall stand just as it has been uttered here.

Mr. BORAH. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is ill, and therefore is absent from the Chamber. He would vote "nay," if present.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to state that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] is unavoidably absent. Were he present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—47.
Aldrich	Curtis	Guggenheim	Perkins
Allison	Daniel	Hale	Piles
Beveridge	Depew	Hemenway	Richardson
Brandegee	Dick	Hopkins	Smith, Mich.

du Pont	Lodge	Smoot

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and the conferees on the part of the Senate, to consist of five Senators, be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, Mr. DANIEL, and Mr. TELLER.

Mr. BACON. As there was no record vote on the question of substitution, I desire to say for myself that as between the House bill and the substitute I very much prefer the substitute, although I voted against it when it had become the substitute. I want to state that because I thought so far as I was concerned—and I believe many others here are of the same view—the conferees should not go before the country and into conference with the assumed opposition on the part of a large number of those of us who voted against the passage of the bill. Between the two, we favor the substitute.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire it to appear in the Record that I did not vote against the substitute of the Aldrich bill because I was in favor of the bill as it came from the House. I would vote against both of them.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to have one thing go on the record also. I believe every Democrat voted for the substitute—the Aldrich bill.

CHARLES H. DICKSON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next case on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The bill (S. 6665) for the relief of Charles H. Dickson was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Charles H. Dickson $256.72, to reimburse him for money taken by burglars from the safe in the office of the Fort Lapwai Indian School, in Idaho.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. ATKINS.

The bill (S. 6544) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of William H. Atkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to remove the charge of desertion from the record of William H. Atkins, who served on the U. S. S. Princeton and Powhatan, and to issue to him an honorable discharge.

Mr. KEAN. Ought not the bill to be amended so as to provide that no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall accrue?

Mr. BACON. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report accompanying it. Mr. CULBERSON. I will relieve the situation by objecting to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will not do that. This is the only bill I have left on the Calendar, and the chairman—

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I surrender.

Mr. BACON. I simply ask that the report be read. I suppose the Senator will not object to that.

Mr. FRYE. The chairman told me it is the most meritorious bill of this kind that was before the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. What attracted my attention and observation was that the man is charged with desertion, and I do not like a charge—

Mr. FRYE. But he immediately reenlisted and served through the entire war.

Mr. BACON. Very well; I do not insist on having the report read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN SHAUGHNESSY.

The bill (H. R. 5297) to complete the naval record of John Shaughnessy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to so amend the naval record of John Shaughnessy, late landsman, United States Navy, on U. S. S. Brooklyn, as to show him honorably discharged, to date from October 9, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLATT NATIONAL PARK, SULPHUR, OKLA.

The bill (S. 5164) to provide for the improvement of the Platt National Park, situated at Sulphur, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "twenty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Platt National Park, situated at Sulphur, Okla., such money to be used and expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report with the bill.

Mr. KEAN. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not want it to go over, as far as I am concerned, but I should like to have the report read.

Mr. OWEN. The bill has already been disposed of in an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the bill had better be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. The motion was agreed to.

TOWN SITES IN OKLAHOMA.

The bill (S. 6246) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to set aside a certain tract of land for town-site purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "quarter," to insert in parentheses "(less 6.28 acres right of way of the Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma Railway)," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to set aside for town-site purposes at Dewey, Okla., the south half of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter, and the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter (less 6.28 acres right of way of the Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma Railway) of section 28, township 27 north, range 13 east, formerly allotted to Julia Lewis, who failed to establish her citizenship in the Cherokee Nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 4, after the word "of," to strike out "forty" and insert "two hundred;" and in line 6, after the word "thereof," to strike out "from the said Julia Lewis" and insert "and selling all other lots therein," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to subdivide these lands in accordance with the present streets and alleys laid out on such lands and to dispose of such lands to the credit of the Cherokee Nation at not exceeding the price of $200 per acre, giving the right of purchasing the lots heretofore acquired in good faith and for valuable consideration to the purchasers thereof and selling all other lots therein at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, depositing the same to the credit of the Cherokee Nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAWAIIAN POSTAL SAVINGS BANK.

The bill (H. R. 11560) relating to unpaid Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank deposits was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that whenever, by reason of the death of any person and the want of an executor or administrator, any demand for moneys deposited in the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank can not be certified to by the governor of Hawaii as provided in section 102 of "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, the governor may, upon written application, certify to such demand as due to the persons satisfactorily proved to him to be the persons who would be entitled to the personal estate of the decedent by the terms of the laws of Hawaii relating to the distribution of estate of intestates, and his certificate so made, when sealed, countersigned, and approved as provided in that section for other certificates shall have the same force and effect as such other certificates.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN NATIONAL INSTITUTE, PARIS, FRANCE.

The bill (S. 6641) to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris) at Paris, France, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Unless there is something specially urgent about the bill, I object to its present consideration.

Mr. FRYE. One moment. I thought the other bill was my last one, but I see that this is mine. This bill has been reported three times unanimously from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It has twice passed the Senate without opposition.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is suggested around me that this is possibly the last bill the Senator from Maine has on the Calendar, and I withdraw the objection.

Mr. FRYE. Thanks to the Senator from Texas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLA M. COLLINS.

The bill (S. 1750) to reimburse Ella M. Collins, late postmaster at Goldfield, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance and supplies, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Ella M. Collins, late postmaster at Goldfield, Nev., $821.08, to reimburse her for money expended for necessary clerical assistance and supplies.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. B. GRAHAM.

The bill (S. 6682) to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., $3,335, to reimburse him for money expended for necessary clerical assistance.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FARMERS AND MERCHANTS' BANK OF MANDAN, N. DAK.

The bill (S. 3723) for the relief of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Mandan, N. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Mandan, N. Dak., $57, being the amount of money which was contained in registered letter No. 65130, addressed to said bank by the United States Treasurer at Washington, D. C., February 28, 1905, and destroyed in the burning of a postal car near Hyndman, Pa., March 1, 1905.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD T. LEWIS.

The bill (S. 1526) to correct the military record of Edward T. Lewis was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Edward T. Lewis shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private of Company K, Seventy-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, as of date May 1, 1864; and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to said Edward T. Lewis an honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 6805) to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all persons, their heirs or assigns, who have in good faith personally or by an attorney in fact made locations of coal land in the Territory of Alaska in their own interest, prior to November 12, 1906, or in accordance with circular of instructions issued by the Secretary of the Interior May 16, 1907, may consolidate their said claims or locations by including in a single claim, location, or purchase not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands, not exceeding in length twice the width of the tract thus consolidated, and for this purpose such persons, their heirs, or assigns may form associations or corporations who may perfect entry of and acquire title to such lands in accordance with the other provisions of law under which said locations were originally made: Provided, That no corporation shall be permitted to consolidate its claims under this act unless 75 per cent of its stock shall be held by persons qualified to enter coal lands in Alaska.

Sec. 2. That the United States shall, at all times, have the preference right to purchase so much of the product of any mine or mines opened upon the lands sold under the provisions of this act as may be necessary for the use of the Army and Navy, and at such reasonable and remunerative price as may be fixed by the President; but the producers of any coal so purchased who may be dissatisfied with the price thus fixed shall have the right to prosecute suits against the United States in the Court of Claims for the recovery of any additional sum or sums they may claim as justly due upon such purchase.

Sec. 3. That if any of the lands or deposits purchased under the provisions of this act shall be owned, leased, trustee, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever so that they form part of, or in any way effect any combination, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres in the district of Alaska, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States by proceedings instituted by the Attorney-General of the United States in the courts for that purpose.

Sec. 4. That every patent issued under this act shall expressly recite the terms and conditions prescribed in sections 2 and 3 hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEAN subsequently said: I should like to have read section 3 of Senate bill 6805, which was passed a few moments ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. That if any of the lands or deposits purchased under the provisions of this act shall be owned, leased, trustee, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres in the district of Alaska, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States by proceedings instituted by the Attorney-General of the United States in the courts for that purpose.

Mr. KEAN. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed. It is utterly impossible to carry out that section.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I now move to strike out section 3.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not sure as to the effect of that section, but as I caught the reading of it it seemed to be wise in its purpose, whether it is wisely drafted or not. I will venture to inquire what the bill is. I ask the Secretary to read the title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6805) to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. BAILEY. That is so far away that I will abide by the judgment of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey to strike out section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT CORDOVA BAY, ALASKA.

The bill (S. 6418) authorizing the sale of lands at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from Colorado to the consideration of the bill.

ALASKA TERMINAL AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The bill (S. 6025) for the relief of the Alaska Terminal and Navigation Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the junior Senator from Colorado to the consideration of the bill.

INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

The bill (S. 6775) construing certain provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889, relating to Indian allotments, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause allotments to be made under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," to any living children of the Sioux tribe of Indians belonging on any of the Great Sioux reservations affected thereby and who have not heretofore been allotted, so long as the tribe to which such Indian children belong is possessed of any unallotted tribal or reservation lands; and where for any reason an Indian did not receive the quantity of land to which he was entitled under the provisions of the said act of March 2, 1889, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be allotted to him sufficient additional lands on the reservation to which he belongs to make, together with the quantity of land heretofore allotted to him, the acreage to which he is entitled under said act of March 2, 1889; and in case of the death of any such Indian the additional lands to which he is of right entitled may be allotted to his heirs: Provided, That the tribe to which he belonged is possessed of any unallotted tribal or reservation lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 178) for appointment of members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers was considered in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Thomas J. Henderson, of Illinois; Walter P. Brownlow, of Tennessee; Edwin P. Hammond, of Indiana, and Joseph S. Smith, of Maine, shall be appointed as members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States—Gen. Thomas J. Henderson to succeed himself, his term of service having expired April 21, 1908; Col. Walter P. Brownlow to succeed himself, his term of service having expired April 21, 1908; Col. Edwin P. Hammond to succeed himself, his term of service having expired April 21, 1908, and Gen. Joseph S. Smith to succeed Gen. J. Marshall Brown, whose term of service would have expired on April 21, 1908, but who died on July 20, 1907.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 7112) providing for the appointment of an inland waterways commission, with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McLAURIN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Mississippi. This completes the Calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

NATIONAL FORESTS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KEAN. This bill does not displace the unfinished business?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; it does not displace the unfinished business. That was laid aside.

Mr. President, to my mind, the pending bill embodies a proposition which is as important to the country as any proposed legislation before this body. The argument in favor of protecting our natural resources, and especially for preserving the navigability of our navigable streams, has been so frequently presented that I do not care to rehearse it again upon this floor.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who was temporarily called out of the Chamber, desires to make some remarks upon the bill, and at the conclusion of his remarks I shall take occasion to answer such objections as he may have to the measure. Pending that, I send to the desk and ask to have read by the Secretary two petitions in favor of this legislation, of which hundreds and thousands have reached this body. The petitions describe so concisely the conditions which exist and the reasons for the passage of this legislation that I send them to the desk as a type of the thousands that have been sent here. I ask that the Secretary may read them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the petition of the executive council of the Connecticut State Board of Trade.

Mr. CARTER. I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut if it would serve the same purpose to have the petitions printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think not, Mr. President. These are very short papers and I should like to have them read to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator expects to get up the bill under the agreement to-day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate on a motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senate has voted to proceed to the consideration of the bill, I will say to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. What I wanted to know was whether we would be limited in our remarks as we would have been during the former part of the day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think there is no limit to debate now.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to the bill being proceeded with.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, during my absence from the Chamber the bill (S. 6805) to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska was reconsidered, and a motion was made to strike out one section and then the bill was again passed. I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to a reconsideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is that motion in order?

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senator from California insists upon it, of course I shall not interpose, but the bill has been reconsidered once and amended by the legislative experience of the Senate, and I should like to know why the Senator now desires another reconsideration.

Mr. FLINT. I desire a reconsideration for the reason that I reported the bill from the Committee on Public Lands, and when it was reached on the Calendar it was passed by the Senate; and during my absence the bill was reconsidered and the important provision in it, according to my mind, was stricken out. The bill provides for the consolidation of certain coal claims to the amount of 2,560 acres. That is the limit to which they can be consolidated, and that provision limited the consolidation so that they could not be added to so as to make a number of consolidations. In other words, the total number of acres of coal land in Alaska in consolidation was limited to 2,560 acres. Now it is unlimited by striking out the provision.

Mr. HOPKINS. There are some other provisions, I understand, that were stricken out that were really the objectionable features. Does the Senator have any objection to the amendment that was made on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FLINT. I do; if the bill is to be passed, I want it passed as it was reported from the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether this colloquy is proceeding by unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall have to object to the further consideration of it at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Senator from Connecticut demands the regular order.

NATIONAL FORESTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the Secretary resume the reading of petitions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will proceed with the reading of the petitions.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading, the petitions being as follows:

APRIL 13, 1908.

To the House of Representatives of these United States in Sixtieth Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, of the executive council of the Connecticut State Board of Trade, do hereby respectfully petition your honorable body concerning the measure now pending before you and entitled "A bill (H. R. 10457) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains."

We are convinced that the powerful array of facts presented by Government experts and other well-known authorities at the hearing before the House Committee on Agriculture, held January 30, 1908, have clearly demonstrated that the rapid destruction of the forests on the watersheds of the mountain ranges specified is directly responsible for the alternate droughts and floods of those interstate rivers taking their sources in these mountains, thereby seriously damaging their navigability for commerce, rendering the water-power running mills and factories during the dry season useless, and causing enormous losses annually by freshet.

In our own Commonwealth, especially, we would refer you to the testimony at said hearing as to the changes in the navigability of the Connecticut River in the vicinity of Hartford, Conn., making it difficult for even light-draft vessels and steamers to reach their docks, owing to the silting of the channel and protracted low stages of water.

It having been clearly shown that it is impossible for the separate States to cope with this vast problem, and that it is for the best interests of commerce and agriculture and the general welfare that the Federal Government should undertake this work, we, as representatives of the entire business interests of the State of Connecticut, do respectfully request of your honorable body the immediate and careful attention which the subject demands, and we do further hope and pray for the speedy enactment of this vital measure.

Charles E. Chandler, president Connecticut State Board of Trade; Willard C. Warren, secretary; Edward E. Bradley, Zalmon Goodsell, Henry C. Dwight, Geo. A. Fairfield, Daniel S. Brinsmade, Richard O. Cheney, Eli C. Birdsey, Dale D. Butler, Clinton L. Allen, John McGinley, Theo. B. Beach, T. H. McKenzie, Homer S. Cummings, George E. Hinman, T. C. Richards, executive council of the State Board of Trade.

THE ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE ADIRONDACKS.
To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Association for the Protection of the Adirondacks, realizing the importance of the ends sought to be attained by H. R. 10457, entitled "A bill for acquiring forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and the White Mountains," hereby expresses its approval of the bill and respectfully urges its enactment.

Of the elementary operations of nature none is of more vital importance to the welfare of mankind than the endless circuit of moisture, rising by evaporation from the ocean, carried by the clouds inland, precipitated to the earth, and flowing by lake and stream to the sea again. But to be of value to man this supply of water, so beneficently provided, must be conserved by either natural or artificial means.

The natural, the least expensive, and the most beneficial conservers of water are the forests, between which and the fallen rain there is a reciprocal service; for while the rain on the one hand waters the trees and makes them grow for all the manifold uses to which wood products are put, the trees, on the other hand, by providing the absorbent forest floor and by retarding the melting of snows, restrain the run-off of the water so that it may be employed with economy, safety, and benefit for the equally manifold purposes of agriculture, commerce, manufacture, sanitation, and domestic use.

As nature has provided an endless round in the movement of moisture, so it has provided a similar round in the reproduction of trees; but with this difference: It has not been demonstrated to the satisfaction of science that man can do anything in the long run to increase or diminish the amount of rain precipitated; but it has been demonstrated only too lamentably that he can interrupt the round of reproduction of organic growths, with disastrous results. By the obliteration of the forests to satisfy an overreaching desire for present gain and by a careless or ignorant improvidence of future needs which takes no measures for reproduction, a double evil is wrought. Not only is the timber supply cut off, but the once beneficent rains, relieved of their natural restraint, become agents of destruction. The soil of the hillsides is washed away at a rate a thousand times faster than when protected by forest covering, and the rivers become spasmodic and unreliable—at one time dangerous torrents, at another so reduced in volume as to be valueless for agriculture, commerce, manufacture, or other practical purposes.

All of these things have been exemplified in the State of New York, and perhaps the forestry condition in no single State east of the Mississippi so closely resembles the general forestry condition in the eastern United States as does that of this State. New York was once forest covered from border to border, and if providently used, the timber supply would have been inexhaustible. But it has not so been used. The forests over a greater part of the State have been erased with no provision for reproduction, and with the result that there is to-day a visible timber supply for only about twenty-five years. This period is about the same as that estimated for the visible timber supply of the nation at large. And not only is the State, like the nation, facing a timber famine, but also mill streams once reliable have become useless in the memory of the present generation, and larger rivers have become characterized by destructive floods.

Conditions like these are imminent within the areas of the proposed Southern Appalachian and White Mountain national forests and the regions tributary thereto, unless the Federal Government, exercising its highest function—which is to provide not only for the present, but also for generations to come—steps forward and interposes the protective power which it alone has the means to command.

We need not turn to desert tracts of the Old World for warning or to the rationally managed forests of some foreign countries for encouragement. The experience of our own country is already eloquent with admonition concerning the evils of improvidence; and our knowledge of the unfailing laws of nature accords its unimpeachable warranty to our confidence concerning the beneficent results of forest protection and culture.

The considerations of public policy, of common business sense, and of humanity moving to the enactment of the bill under consideration are so powerful that we again commend it to your favorable consideration.

THE ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE ADIRONDACKS.

TRIBUNE BUILDING, New York, March 23, 1908.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate has already been read and amended, and I will ask the Secretary to state the amendments which have been heretofore adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments to the bill which have already been agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The amendments to the bill which have heretofore been agreed to are, first, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the words "Secretary of Agriculture," to insert "for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to state the amendment heretofore adopted, in line 4.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the Senator from Connecticut is simply offering these amendments.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. The Senator from Colorado perhaps does not know that these amendments had been agreed to by the Senate when the bill was under consideration on April 15.

Mr. TELLER. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I believe that is the fact.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 1, lines 4 and 5, I move to strike out the words "for national-forest purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, lines 4 and 5, after the word "acquire," it is proposed to strike out "for national-forest purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 3, page 2, at the end of line 23, I move to insert the words "for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 2, at the end of line 23, it is proposed to insert "for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 6, page 4, line 1, after the word "prescribe," that section having provided as to the jurisdiction of the United States over the lands proposed to be taken and for the sale of such parts as were adapted for agriculture, I move to amend by adding the words:

And in case of such sale the jurisdiction over the lands sold shall ipso facto revert to the State in which the lands sold lie.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, page 4, line 1, after the word "prescribe," it is proposed to insert:

And in case of such sale the jurisdiction over the lands sold shall ipso facto revert to the State in which the lands sold lie.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 9, page 5, line 7, before the words "per centum," I move to strike out "10" and insert "25," so as to make the bill conform to the amendment which was adopted upon the agricultural appropriation bill as to the percentage of receipts from the administration of national forests which should be paid to the States.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is not possible to hear what is going on. I suppose the Senator from Connecticut is trying to perfect his bill so as to present it to the Senate in proper shape. I have no objection to that. I am objecting to the bill, not in detail, but on principle. I have no objection to the Senator making any amendment which he thinks will improve his bill. I should like the Senator, after he gets his bill in proper shape, to have it printed, so that we may see it as he desires it to stand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should not think that there was any occasion for reprinting the bill. The bill has simply been amended by inserting the words "for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams;" and I should not think that any reprint of the bill was necessary because a simple amendment had been adopted.

The reason for that amendment was this: It had been supposed when the bill was reported that its object was sufficiently described by the language authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase lands deemed to be "more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for other purposes, and situated on the watersheds of navigable streams." Inasmuch as certain Senators claimed that that was not the true object of the bill, but that the true object of the bill was to take the lands for the purpose of preserving the forests, I think it is well to distinctly specify that the object of the bill is the preservation of the waters of navigable streams.

Having stated that much, if the Senator from Colorado desires to address the Senate in opposition to the measure, I have said all I care to say at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut has offered an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 9, page 5, line 7, before the words "per centum," it is proposed to strike out "ten," and insert "twenty-five," so as to read:

That 25 per cent of all money received during any fiscal year from each national forest,

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think we who are opposed to this bill are entitled to have it printed; and if the Senator does not ask for that, I am going to ask for it myself, so that we may have by to-morrow a copy of the bill as it now stands. I do not suppose the Senator expects to pass the bill to-night.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. I have no objection to the Senator asking that the bill be reprinted, or I will ask to have it reprinted if the Senator desires it.

Mr. TELLER. I do desire it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So that it may be ready to-morrow. But I should like to have the Senator proceed with his remarks, if he cares to do so, now.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, while I do not want to tire the Senate I want to say that I will not be able to conclude to-night on this bill. So I should like to have the bill reprinted so that I may speak on it to-morrow morning if we continue the discussion of the measure.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I presume under the circumstances—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, Mr. President, I will not ask the attention of the Senate any further this afternoon to the bill, but will ask to have it laid aside and printed as amended.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate—

Mr. TELLER. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Connecticut, I will proceed in the morning.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That will be very agreeable.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 544, Senate bill 6484.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the bill be printed as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I now ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside, and I also ask unanimous consent that it be made the unfinished business following Senate joint resolution No. 74.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. I think the Senate had better retain control over its time and procedure. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 6484.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I asked unanimous consent, and I did not understand that there was any objection to my request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall be able to be present to-morrow, and I desire to make a brief suggestion in regard to this bill before it is laid aside.

This bill proposes that the Government of the United States shall purchase land for the purpose of selling it again. That is written in the bill. On a former occasion, when that was proposed in regard to certain lands in Oregon, I stated my position as being against a proposition of that kind. I do not think that the Government of the United States has the power to purchase land for the purpose of selling it again. It has engaged in many kinds of business, but never before in that character of business. This bill proposes that the Government shall appropriate $5,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing land of private owners, and in section 6 it proposes that the Government may sell it again at such prices as may be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. President, there is no provision in the Constitution of the United States that authorizes any such proceedings whatever. It has never been done and, in my judgment, it can not properly be done. The United States is authorized to acquire property for certain purposes—for its purposes—but to pay $5,000,000 for land for the express purpose, as stated in the bill, of selling it again is entirely beyond the power of Congress.

I merely desired to state my position because the question has been previously before the Senate, and I shall be glad to have any Senator state any authority upon which such a proceeding can be based. I am not going to object to the details in regard to the bill or the creation of this forest reserve. The Government may reserve its own lands; but to purchase lands for the purpose of reserving them or for the purpose of selling them is entirely beyond any power possessed by the Government of the United States; and with that suggestion I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Idaho takes his seat—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. It seems to me that he states the language of that section a little broader than it is. In reading the section it occurs to me that it is simply a precautionary section, providing that if in the purchase of this real estate for the purpose of aiding navigation land should be acquired that would not be necessary for the purposes intended, the Government of the United States would have the right and authority to dispose of it. I think that is quite a different proposition from the one stated by the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think the Senator has overlooked the language of this bill contained in line 19 and the succeeding lines on page 3, which states expressly that this right shall apply to lands more valuable for agriculture. That question should be determined before the purchase of lands, if the Government has the right to purchase lands at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to correct the Senator. The first section does not provide for the purchase of lands more valuable for agriculture, but quite the contrary—of lands "more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for other purposes."

Mr. HEYBURN. I referred to the language in section 6, and not to the language in section 1.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The language of section 6, if the Senator will allow me to call his attention to that fact—

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I was just going to read it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish the Senator would read, then, the whole of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will read that part of it that applies.

SEC. 6. That whereas small areas of land chiefly valuable for agriculture may of necessity or by inadvertence be included in tracts acquired under this act, the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, and he is hereby authorized, upon application or otherwise, to examine and ascertain the location and extent of such areas as in his opinion may be occupied for agricultural purposes without injury to the forests and which are not needed for public purposes, and may list and describe the same by metes and bounds, or otherwise, and offer them for sale as homesteads at their true value, to be fixed by him, to actual settlers in tracts not exceeding 80 acres in area.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Under that language, do I understand the Senator to claim that this bill authorizes the Government to buy land for the purpose of selling it, or is it a precautionary and a wise provision that if the Government does buy a large tract of land, and it happens to contain a piece that is fit for agriculture, which is not needed for the Government's purpose the Government may get rid of it? And what is there wrong about that?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a violation of the very principle upon which this Government rests.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has not the Government the right to sell the timber on its own lands?

Mr. HEYBURN. On its own lands the Government may do as it sees fit.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Are not these to be the Government's lands if it has bought them and paid for them?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, perhaps that may be the purpose the Senator has in mind; but unfortunately the language of the bill gives the Government the right, at the option of the Secretary of Agriculture, to sell these lands without limit. It may be found that 5 per cent or 90 per cent of these lands belong to the class that may be resold by the Government.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator has answered the proposition to which I was going to call his attention.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator this question: If the Government has a right to buy the land, has it not an equal right to sell it if it has not further use for it?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not feel that I am called upon to answer that question. The question of the right to buy lands by the Government is limited and defined by the Constitution. It says exactly for what purpose the Government may buy the lands; and in the absence of such a provision the Government would have no right to buy any lands.

This bill proposes to give the Government, first, the right to buy lands for the purpose of creating a forest reserve; and then it provides that the Government may sell those lands, not under a rule prescribed in the act, but under a rule to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and no limit is placed as to the quantity of land that may be sold nor is any price fixed.

I am not attacking this bill on a question of sentiment or because of any views that I may entertain in regard to the wisdom or unwisdom of creating forest reserves, because it is not necessary in the consideration of this bill to enter upon that question at all. I am speaking of the power of the Government to purchase lands and providing in the act allowing the purchase that the Government may resell them for agricultural purposes.

Mr. President, that question was before us in the Oregon case, and I think the sentiment of the Senate at that time was practically unanimous in support of the position that I now take. It was there provided that the Government might condemn—which is a method of purchase—lands in the State of Oregon for the purpose of subjecting them to the Reclamation Service. There was a large tract of land in Oregon, the owners of which would not agree to enter into a reclamation project, and the Department having charge of the Reclamation Service desired that Congress should enable them to acquire that land, by condemnation or otherwise. I then stated the legal proposition as I state it to-day—that it was not a question of policy, but that it was a question of power. If the Government can buy lands proposed to be purchased under this bill, it can buy all of the lands in a State. If it can buy 1 acre for this purpose, it can buy 20,000,000 acres for this purpose. Careful legislation for the creation of this reserve should provide that the Government would only buy such lands as it intended to keep permanently for this purpose. That would be careful legislation. If we have not time to consider and make certain these provisions, we should not legislate at all. Until it is definitely determined what lands the Government will need, waiving the question of its right to purchase them, there should be no legislation upon the subject.

I have heard it stated and I have seen it in print that there will be a very large proportion of these lands that will be sold again by the Government to persons for the purpose of farming them, subject to the rules and regulations that the Forestry Service may make in regard to the conditions under which they may be farmed. That is the avowed purpose and intent of this legislation.

I am as much in favor of conserving and preserving to the use of the people the natural resources of the country as any man in this body or as anyone elsewhere, but it does not follow because you are in favor of the Government so doing that you are to make a reckless provision of this kind whereby the Government spends $5,000,000 to acquire an indefinite tract of land or a very large tract of land—and there is no limit placed upon the amount in this bill—with the understanding expressed in the legislation itself that the Government is to resell it. That is a plain legal proposition involving the power of the Government to do this thing. Waiving the question of policy, it involves the power of the Government, and Congress should not, the Senate of the United States—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield in a moment. The Senate of the United States should not lose sight of the question of its power in dealing with this question out of sympathy with a policy or as a matter of sentiment. We are all lawmakers in this body, and we are bound to consider the question as to the extent of the power which we may exercise.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Idaho takes his seat, I desire to call to his attention the fact that the bill does not provide for the condemnation of land, but that the Government is to acquire the land by purchase or gift. In acquiring land in this manner it seems to me that section 6 is a very wise provision, because it will undoubtedly occur in many instances that the owners of the real estate that is sought to be bought will not sell the necessary part that the Government must have in order to conserve the interests of this bill unless the entire farm is taken, while a portion of it may not be needed by the Government. Under such conditions there ought to be a provision in the bill, so that the land that is not needed for the purposes provided in the bill can be redispersed of by the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, condemnation is purchase. There is no difference in law. It is only one method of purchase.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator will agree with me in this, that under condemnation proceedings the Government could go out and condemn just such land, and such only, as it needed, and could take it; but if the Government purchases the land it must take what the seller will agree to dispose of.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this bill proceeds upon the idea that the Government will be able to obtain title to this land for the price of $5,000,000. You can not get away from that proposition. You do not need to name the process. We are appropriating $5,000,000 for the purpose of acquiring lands, coupled with a provision that the Government shall or may sell a part of them if it acquires them. If it acquires them, it acquires them under the provision of this act, and whether it be by purchase or gift or by the legal method of condemnation makes not the slightest difference. It is a question of the power of the Government to acquire lands for the purpose of disposing of them, either by gift or by sale or by any other method.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course I can not admit that the Senator correctly states the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill as is perfectly plain to my mind and as it states in so many words is to preserve the navigability of navigable streams. It is not for the purpose of buying land for the purpose of selling it again at all. It proposes to buy some forests to act as a conservator of the water, to deliver it under control to the streams; and in my judgment the Government of the United States has just as good authority to buy a forest and conserve the water at the source of a navigable river as it would have to build a dam or canal in the interest of navigation.

As to selling the surplus parts of the land that are not required for that purpose, if the Senator's contention were true the Government would be compelled to keep a lot of land that was valuable and the proceeds from the sale of which could go toward preserving the navigability of streams. It would be obliged to keep it. The Senator's theory would result in this, as it seems to me, that while the Government has the right to buy uniforms for its soldiers and ammunition and guns, it has no right to sell what it does not need after it has bought it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to an instance in American history where a very large tract of land was purchased by the Government of the United States and subsequently conveyed to its citizens. I refer to the Louisiana purchase, where we paid many millions of dollars for the purpose of increasing the territory of the United States and subsequently disposed of it—land on which we now have a number of splendid States of the Union.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois if the State of Idaho was not carved out of that very property?

Mr. GALLINGER. Part of it, at least.

Mr. HEYBURN. What the Government bought was the right of sovereignty. It did not buy the land at so much an acre. It bought the right of government and the right of sovereignty in the Louisiana purchase.

Mr. BACON. How did it acquire the title to the property?

Mr. HEYBURN. The property passed by reason of the sovereignty.

Mr. BACON. The title passed.

Mr. HEYBURN. The sovereignty passed.

Mr. BACON. And the title also.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask the Senator how much an acre did we pay for the Louisiana purchase?

Mr. BACON. If I knew the number of acres and divided it into $15,000,000, I could tell the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no analogy whatever between the money paid to the French Government for the Louisiana purchase and the proposition before the Senate.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is a very able lawyer. Does not the Senator recognize the fact that we not only purchased the property, but that we actually purchased the identical land?

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no word of mention in the instrument by which we acquired the Louisiana purchase with reference to the land that came to us by virtue of that sovereignty.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator in the matter of the Louisiana purchase as well as the Gadsden purchase and other purchases which we have made what the sovereignty would have been worth if we had not got the land.

Mr. HEYBURN. We did not purchase it as a land purchase. If we purchased it for the purpose of ownership, we purchased it from a foreign country. The Government has never claimed or exercised the right to purchase the land of its own citizens, and I think I will not be diverted to the consideration of the Louisiana purchase in expressing my objections to the legal right of the Government to purchase land from private citizens for this purpose.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask, before the Senator goes entirely from this proposition, if that question is not rather a mixed one? Did not the inhabitants within that section at the time of the Louisiana purchase themselves own land which the Government did not take by purchase? The remainder only the Government got?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. The Government did not purchase the private ownership of lands that were included within the Louisiana cession. It did not deal with private titles at all. It purchased whatever went with the sovereignty over that domain—nothing more.

Mr. HOPKINS. Where did the Government of the United States get the legal title which it subsequently gave to the various citizens who acquired title from the Government?

Mr. CULBERSON. That was to the public land in that territory.

Mr. HEYBURN. It never did get title to an acre of land there in private ownership.

PLATT NATIONAL PARK, SULPHUR, OKLA.

Mr. OWEN. I wish the Senator from Idaho would yield to me for just one moment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield for a moment.

Mr. OWEN. I move to reconsider the action of the Senate in postponing indefinitely the bill (S. 5164) to provide for the improvement of the Platt National Park, situated at Sulphur, Okla., and that it be restored to its place on the Calendar. I wish it to retain its place on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not sure that that was an infraction of the rule which the Senate has adopted to prevent a very common and very objectionable practice which obtained very largely in the Senate of interrupting Senators upon the floor for the purpose of asking the Senate to give attention to other business. I only call attention to it now—I did not do so at the time—in order that it may not appear that we have become indifferent or forgetful of that rule. I am not sure it was a violation. It was in spirit, if not in letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is quite right. In the later days of the session, when the Senate is pressed with the consideration of appropriation bills, and when many amendments must be offered to be printed, and when many Senators are necessarily absent from the Chamber on conference committees, the Chair is inclined to be liberal in the interpretation of the rule, if the Senate does not object.

Mr. BACON. I think the Chair is quite correct in that.

NATIONAL FORESTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Texas is very much in point, as I understood his suggestion, that we did not undertake to acquire property in private ownership under the Louisiana purchase. We simply acquired the right which the Government had, which carried with it the right to dispose of the public lands.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator will allow me to make a suggestion which probably he has covered by his answer. It seems to me that that was a cession of sovereignty over this territory to this Government by the Government of France. We took by cession the sovereignty that France exercised, and by virtue of the sovereignty of course we held the public lands within the territory.

Mr. BACON. I think if the Senator will examine—

Mr. FULTON. But I want to say this: It occurs to me that a different question, for other reasons, is presented here, and that is the right to acquire land within a State under the Constitution for any purpose other than the purposes for which the Constitution provides we may acquire it.

Mr. BACON. I think if the Senator will examine the historical facts he will become satisfied he is mistaken in saying the Government of France transferred to us the sovereignty. The fact of the business is that at the time of the purchase France was not in possession of the property. Spain was. We simply bought a contract.

Mr. HEYBURN. The fact is that there had been, a few months prior to the negotiations with the French Government, an arrangement between Spain and the French Government which had not really been consummated at that time.

Mr. BACON. That is what I say. We bought a contract.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to make the further suggestion, though, that Mr. Jefferson, under whose banner the Senator from Georgia, I believe, marches, doubted, indeed denied, that we had the constitutional authority to do that.

Mr. BACON. That is a side question which I do not want to stop to discuss. It has been discussed a good many times. I plead guilty to marching under the banner of Jefferson. I am only sorry the Senator from Oregon does not.

Mr. FULTON. I knew the Senator was proud of it. That is why I mentioned it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not intend, so far as my action is concerned, to protract the consideration of this question further than to call attention to this question of power, in order that it may not be said hereafter that the attention of the Senate was not directed to that question.

If the Government can purchase this land for this purpose and dispose of it as provided by section 6 of the pending bill, then, if in the judgment of the Government a community of farmers in any State of the Union are not making the best use of the land, the Government may purchase it for the purpose of redistribution to others who, in the opinion of the Government, may make better use of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I quite agree with what the Senator from Idaho says to the effect that the Government of the United States has no power to engage in the business of buying and selling land. The Government has no right to purchase a piece of land for the express purpose of selling it again. I agree with him about that. But the Government of the United States has the right, for example, to acquire land for the purpose of a military post. The Senator will agree with me about that.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Constitution gives it that right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. Now, suppose the Government had under an act of Congress purchased a large tract of land for a military post, and that it should thereafter turn out that certain small areas were not necessary for military uses, would the Senator say that Congress could not authorize a sale of those small areas?

Mr. HEYBURN. No, Mr. President, I would not say so, because Congress may under the law dispose of property that is no longer needed for governmental purposes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. One other question.

Mr. HEYBURN. All right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If Congress has the power, after the property has been acquired for a specified purpose, to dispose of small areas that are not needed for that purpose, may it not legally provide in advance that if it shall turn out by inadvertence or in any other way that certain small portions of the tract to be acquired for a legitimate purpose are not needed for that purpose, they may be disposed of?

Mr. HEYBURN. Are we to act on the assumption that we are acting inadvertently? That is the conclusion which naturally arises from the suggestion of the Senator from Utah. It is an assumption and a tacit admission that at the time of the enacting of the legislation we are probably acting inadvertently. Are we in the habit of enacting laws which at the time of their enactment are probably inadvertent?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not speaking of the legislation as being seemly, but I am speaking of it from the standpoint of being legal. We have the power to do that; and I understood the Senator from Idaho was attacking section 6 upon the ground that we had power to pass it; not that it was not seemly legislation.

Mr. HEYBURN. The conditions cited by the Senator from Utah with reference to the purchase of land for military reservations or like purposes have no application whatever to a bill which proposes to purchase land for the purposes mentioned in this bill. It is a constitutional power especially given to Congress to acquire lands for necessary military purposes. The language of the Constitution restricts the power to acquiring land for necessary purposes; not for speculative purposes—for the purpose of determining afterwards whether we may or may not need them—but for necessary purposes.

The Senator will not claim for one moment that the doctrine suggested by him might be extended to the case which I have cited of the Government purchasing land, because in its judgment the land may be disposed of by the Government to persons who will make a better use of it or a more profitable use, either in the interest of individuals or in the interest of the Government. There is no analogy between the cases.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not understand that the Senator from Idaho, in attacking the provisions contained in section 6, is claiming that the general purpose of the bill is beyond the power of Congress. That is an entirely different matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. I reserved that point, because I did not care to confuse the consideration of two legal propositions—of the right to purchase for the purposes of this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the Senator in making his argument with reference to section 6 is at least conceding, for the sake of argument, that the bill is valid in its general purpose.

Mr. HEYBURN. I so stated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. But I concede it only for the purpose of the argument.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So conceding, what difference in principle is there between the case presented by this bill and the illustration I gave the Senator with reference to the purchase of land for military reservations?

Mr. HEYBURN. The difference is found in the language of section 6.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In other words, the proposition to which I invite the attention of the Senator is this: Assuming, for the sake of argument, that Congress has a right to pass a law providing for the purchase of lands of this character for the purpose of protecting its navigable streams, then, if it turns out after the purchase has been made that certain small areas are not necessary for that purpose, they may be disposed of; Congress may afterwards authorize them to be disposed of; and if Congress could do it afterwards, so far as the question of power is concerned, I see no reason why Congress could not provide for it in advance.

Mr. HEYBURN. Unfortunately for the argument of the Senator, section 6 does not base it upon the question of necessity, but leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. President, we must take this bill as it is before us, and not as it might have been written. The bill contemplates upon its face the reselling of this property for the very purpose to which it is now devoted—agriculture. The Government might, under the policy insisted upon by the Senator from Utah and by the Senator in charge of this bill, purchase farms that were not, in the judgment of the Government, being well administered, in order that it might experiment and see whether or not it could put them to a better use, and then in the event that it could not put them to a better use, retain the right to resell them for the same purposes for which they were devoted when the Government purchased them.

It seems to me the whole case is so entirely devoid of any basis of legal right on the part of Congress that it ought to fall by the weight of its own terms.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the language of the treaty under which we acquired the Louisiana purchase.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have it in mind.

Mr. NELSON. Paragraph 1 of the treaty, after reciting the fact that the French Republic had acquired the cession from Spain, goes on to say:

And whereas, in pursuance of the treaty—

Referring to the Spanish treaty—and particularly of the third article, the French Republic has an incontestible title to the domain and to the possession of the said territory: The First Consul of the French Republic desiring to give to the United States a strong proof of his friendship, doth hereby cede to the said United States, in the name of the French Republic, forever and in full sovereignty, the said territory, with all its rights and appurtenances, as fully and in the same manner as they have been acquired by the French Republic, in virtue of the above-mentioned treaty, concluded with His Catholic Majesty.

In the cession made by the preceding article are included the adjacent islands belonging to Louisiana, all public lots and squares, vacant lands, and all public buildings, fortifications, barracks, and other edifices which are not private property.

The Government acquired this land from France. It acquired it by a cession. A part of that same land was given by the United States to the State of Idaho, sections 16 and 36 for school purposes, and then a lot for a State university and other public buildings. So the Government of the United States, according to the theory of the Senator from Idaho, has been proceeding in this matter unconstitutionally. A good deal of the rest of the land which was not given to the State of Idaho the Government of the United States has disposed of in various ways under its land laws—the homestead law, the cash entry, the stone and timber act, the desert-entry law, and other land laws. It has disposed of to its own citizens the very land it purchased for $15,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Idaho ought to make a recession of that land.

Mr. NELSON. Inasmuch as the whole thing, according to the Senator's theory, has been unconstitutionally done, why can not the Government reclaim all the property given to the State of Idaho, at all events.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say, with all respect to the Senator from Minnesota, that I am astonished that he should present such an argument and offer such conclusions. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota if in his judgment as a lawyer the United States Government, acting through Congress, could purchase his land in Minnesota for the purpose of selling it to somebody else?

Mr. NELSON. With my consent, certainly; and the United States could take my whole farm on which I live under the power of eminent domain, if it saw fit. It might want to build a military post there.

Mr. HEYBURN. Ah, there is the nub of the entire proposition. It could build a military post.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Or other governmental purposes.

Mr. NELSON. It might want it for a seed farm to raise seed for the Agricultural Department.

Mr. HEYBURN. My question is, Can they take it by purchase from the Senator for the purpose of selling it to some other farmer or with a view of selling it to some other farmer? With all respect to the arguments which have been made, it seems to me they are sophistical.

The proposition here and the acquisition of lands under the treaty with France is not a subject for comparison at all. We took by the terms of the treaty the sovereignty, which carried with it not lands held in private ownership, but lands belonging with the sovereignty and as a part of it. They passed to us because we were granted the sovereignty which controlled them in the absence of private ownership. But we took not one acre of privately owned land by virtue of the purchase of the Louisiana tract, as it is generally designated, which was in fact a price paid for the cession of sovereignty.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to answer a suggestion by the Senator, which somewhat astonished me, when he compared the propositions contained in this bill with the granting of lands by the Government to a State for educational purposes. The Government of the United States became the sovereign owner of the public lands, which could not be held in private ownership, and being such sovereign owner it conferred upon the State the right to the use and ownership of those lands. It had that right. But that, because it had and exercised that right, it could purchase a farm for the purpose of selling it to some other farmer, will not appeal to any legal mind.

Mr. President, just take into consideration in connection with this section 3, which contains an admission that gives away this entire proposition. Section 3 provides—

That no deed or other instrument of conveyance shall be accepted or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act until the legislature of the State in which the land lies shall have consented to the acquisition of such land by the United States for national-forest purposes.

There is a concession that gives away the whole proposition. The Government here must get the consent of the State to purchase these lands. Under what clause of the Constitution does the Government of the United States have to get the consent of the State in which the lands of private individuals are situated to purchase the land of private individuals?

Mr. GALLINGER. What clause of the Constitution prohibits it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That provision, of course, was not necessary to the acquiring by the Government of land within the State, but was simply put in so that if there should be any State that does not want a forest reserve in the State the Government would not do it against the wishes of the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was addressing my objection to the question of power. I am inquired of sotto voce by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] what provision there is to be found in the Constitution that prevents it. That is not a fair test of the powers of Government in any case, so far as the acquisition of property is concerned, inasmuch as the Constitution has dealt with that question and limited in express terms the purposes for which, and the conditions under which, the Government may acquire real estate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is not one of those expressly enumerated powers which the States gave to the United States Government the right to regulate commerce among the States, and does not that include the right to preserve the navigability of our rivers and streams?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the argument is as far-fetched as though you were to provide for watchmen to awaken the engineers on a railroad train in order that the train might engage in interstate commerce. There is no more reason or argument behind that, and it would not be so absurd a proposition.

Mr. CARTER. Does the Senator contend that the United States Government can not purchase land in a State without consulting the State?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not contend it, and I have no defense to make of the section which undertakes to state that principle, which is section 3.

Mr. CARTER. Now, that question being answered by the Senator in that fashion, permit me to suggest to him that undoubtedly this section has in contemplation the cession by the State of police power over these forests to the General Government. In the absence in that cession of jurisdiction of course the State rules and regulations would be supreme in all police matters within the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. Under what provision of the Constitution does the Government of the United States exercise police powers of this kind, I would ask the Senator?

Mr. CARTER. Unquestionably the Congress of the United States has supreme authority in managing the public domain of the United States and the property of the United States. But that is apart, if the Senator will permit me a moment. The question of the jurisdiction of a State for police purposes within the limits of a State can not be ousted by the ownership of land within the State by the Federal Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am glad to hear that stated by the Senator from Montana. I had contended for it.

Mr. CARTER. But in this case the Senator from Idaho quarrels with the proposed statute for the reason that it contemplates a cession to the United States of jurisdiction now in the State for the Federal purposes contemplated by this act.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the State does not cede jurisdiction to the United States except within the limitations of the Constitution of the United States. Does the Senator contend that a State can concede to the United States its police power over property held in private ownership in a State? Not for a moment would the Senator contend that.

Mr. CARTER. There is no contention of that kind.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Government can not acquire this property under the provisions of the law, then the State can add nothing to the jurisdiction of the United States, and if the Government can acquire it, it needs no assistance from the State to have jurisdiction.

Now, a word as to the proposition that these lands are being acquired in order that the Government may exercise police control over them in the interest of preserving the water supply. The purposes stated in the bill are that the lands shall be acquired for the purpose of creating a forest reserve, and the bill undertakes to provide in detail how that jurisdiction shall be exercised and under what rules and regulations the forest reserve to be created shall be managed and controlled.

We have been confronted of late with the proposition that the Government of the United States has an especial interest in conserving the water supply and controlling the use of the waters in each of the States. The Government not only has no interest in it, but it has no power to undertake it. The rivers in the States are under the control of the State government. The State can not confer sovereignty upon the General Government over anything except as provided in the Constitution, and the Constitution is a grant of powers limited by its terms.

Mr. President, I have said more than I had intended to say in regard to the question of the power of the Government to acquire land for the purposes specified in the bill, but I might have taken up the question of the right of the Government to acquire any land beyond the powers conferred in the Constitution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if the Government has not as much authority to preserve a forest for the purpose of preventing the soil from washing down and filling up the channels of rivers as it has to spend the money of the Government in digging out the mud of the rivers, as we do by millions in the river and harbor bill, or, as is suggested to me, in building a levee?

Mr. HEYBURN. That question in the abstract might be answered in the affirmative, but as applied to the provision under consideration, I answer it unqualifiedly in the negative. Is the Government to undertake to regulate the rainfall and the conservation of the rain? Then, why does not the Government build great reservoirs at the heads of all the rivers, in order that the water may be released in seasons of drought?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does at the headwaters of the Mississippi.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that that very thing has been done by the Government at the headwaters of the Mississippi.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observed to the Senator from Idaho that that very thing has been done at the headwaters of the Mississippi. I have had the privilege of looking at those great reservoirs.

Mr. HEYBURN. The purpose for which those reservoirs were created, as expressed in the law under which they were created, has no reference whatever to the washing out of the channels in the rivers.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; but it has reference to improving the navigability of the rivers by holding the water back and in dry seasons letting it go out; and the contention is that it does accomplish that very purpose. I do not know whether it does or not, but that is the contention.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was not the purpose expressed in the legislation. I will not protract this discussion by going into all the dam bills or the bills providing for the construction of reservoirs that the Government has made appropriations for.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, unless there is some other

Senator who desires to speak on the bill this afternoon, a reprint of the bill having been ordered by the Senate with the understanding that it is to be completed to-morrow, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be laid aside and that it be made the unfinished business, subject, however, to the priority of the present unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut asks—

Mr. CARTER. Before that question is disposed of, to the end that we may secure a more extensive understanding, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business on Monday next Senate bill 6484, known as the "postal savings bank bill," be taken up, and that a final vote be taken on the pending amendments and on the bill before adjournment on that day.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will perceive by examining the Calendar that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKLEY] has given notice that immediately following the morning business on Monday he would ask the Senate to consider a certain bill.

Mr. CARTER. I make my request for Tuesday, then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. TELLER. I will object to the postal savings bank bill being made a special order for either Monday or Tuesday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Then I give notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 6484, known as the "postal savings bank bill."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside and that it be made the unfinished business, subject to the unfinished business now.

Mr. TELLER. And appropriation bills.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And appropriation bills.

Mr. CARTER. I can only consent to the request of the Senator subject to the notice I have given, and I reserve the right to make the motion to which I have referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MERRIMAC RIVER AND OTHER BRIDGES.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I should like to introduce a joint resolution to correct a bill and to have it considered at this time. I will state that unless the bill is corrected it will be valueless. It has left the Senate and has left the House, but has not reached the President.

The joint resolution (S. R. 90) to amend an act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable waters, etc., was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the bill (S. 4809) entitled "An act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to extend the time for the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to legalize the construction of bridges across navigable waters," be, and the same is hereby, corrected, so that the name St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railway Company, as used therein, be changed to the Brownsville and Gulf Railway Company.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 21875. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 21897. An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 4809. An act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to extend the time for the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to legalize the construction of bridges across navigable waters;

H. R. 13577. An act providing for the resurvey of certain public lands in the State of Nebraska;

H. R. 16770. An act granting land to Anna Johnson; and
H. R. 17056. An act for the relief of Capt. Charles E. Morton, Sixteenth United States Infantry.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. FLINT. I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill (S. 6805) to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 6805, to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska, was passed be reconsidered. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. There is a pretty thin Senate here to reconsider a vote. I want to know what is the purpose of the Senator? Does he propose to bring the bill again before the Senate?

Mr. FLINT. I shall ask to have the bill placed on the Calendar after having an amendment to the bill reconsidered.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object, Mr. President.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to the motion, but I do object to the section that was stricken out being replaced in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? If not, the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed are reconsidered.

Mr. KEAN. The bill is on the Calendar?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. KEAN. I object to the consideration of the bill. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I desire to give a notice.

Mr. KEAN. I yield for that purpose.

INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, after the close of the morning business, I will move the Senate for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 7112) providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission, with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I think that will interfere with the rule the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] has had made.

Mr. McLAURIN. I was just going to make that suggestion.

Mr. TELLER. That is my information. The Senator from Connecticut asked unanimous consent that the bill which he has in charge should be the order of business in the morning.

Mr. McLAURIN. And consent was given to that.

Mr. TELLER. Consent was given. The Senator from Nevada had better change the day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Could the Senator suggest another convenient hour to present the matter?

Mr. TELLER. I judge that the bill the Senator from Connecticut has in charge will take the best part of the day. Probably the Senator had better name another day, say Tuesday.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then, I will say, after the disposition of the bill which the Senator from Connecticut has in charge I will move the Senate to take up for consideration the bill which I have indicated.

Mr. CARTER. I call the attention of the Senator from Nevada, and likewise of the Senator from Colorado, to the fact that the unanimous consent sought by the Senator from Connecticut, and accorded to him, was with the understanding that immediately after the close of the routine business in the morning I will make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the postal savings bank bill.

Mr. TELLER. I did not understand that.

Mr. CARTER. That was the—

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to interfere, only I thought the Senator from Connecticut had gone out of the Chamber. I am going to speak on the bill. I can speak to-morrow or some other day.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 21875. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 21897. An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, and improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FLINT. I ask the Senator to withhold his motion for a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I ask the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted to the bill (S. 6805) to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks the Senate to resume the consideration of the bill with a view to reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and the question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

Mr. KEAN. I suggest that the Senator from California let that motion be pending.

Mr. FLINT. I simply want to have the bill as it was originally reported to the Senate, and then have it placed on the Calendar. I do not care to ask for any action on the bill at this time.

Mr. KEAN. Very well; I do not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After sixteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 16, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 15, 1908.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 15, 1908.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Tuesday, May 12, 1908.]

The recess having expired, at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, as amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to suspend the rules and pass the Military Academy appropriation bill, with amendments. The Clerk will report the bill and amendments.

Mr. HAY. Before the bill is reported I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey about the time—whether the gentleman expects to pass the bill under the suspension of the rules, with the usual twenty minutes' debate?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. With the usual twenty minutes' debate on a side.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909:

Total buildings and grounds, $54,520.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands a second. Under the rule a second is ordered, and the gentleman from New Jersey has twenty minutes and the gentleman from New York has twenty minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the West Point appropriation bill, reported by the Committee on Military Affairs as No. 21875. There are some few formal amendments, mostly in striking out the word "submitted," which by mistake was reprinted from the estimates in the bill. The only other corrections were such as made the bill as reported by the committee, certain corrections having been omitted in the printing.

The appropriations last year were $1,929,703.82. The estimates of this year were $977,587.87. The committee cut down the estimates for building and grounds by over $194,000, leaving only $54,520 for the buildings, and the total of this bill, after adding $52,000 for increase of pay of officers and men who are at the Point, besides $35,000 for cadets and $3,500 for professors, is $826,337.87, or one hundred and fifty-odd thousand dollars less than the estimates, and over a million dollars less than the appropriations of last year.

Mr. Speaker, in the appropriations we have retained one item which we are glad to add to West Point, and that is a battery and searchlights for practice in the more refined and scientific part of artillery practice, which has not been had at the Point before.

There is one item in the bill which will be of interest to Members of the House. It was thought worth while to change the method of visiting the Point by having the two committees of the Senate and House go there every year between November and March, charging no mileage except from Washington, and allowing nothing but the actual expenses of those committees.

The Board of Visitors as at present constituted is a very pleasant junket. The board of officers as here organized will be a working body of the Senate and of the House, who will go and see what is really going on, probably in November, and come back and tell the House what they have really ascertained. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Before the gentleman sits down, I would like to ask him a question. The Board of Visitors at the Military Academy, under the law as it now exists, is composed of three Members, who are appointed by the Speaker of the House, and my recollection is—

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Shall I read the law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is not important to my question. Three Members of the House, two members of the Senate—

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. There are seven outside visitors.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Making a board of twelve. Now, this will authorize a committee consisting of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate as a board of visitors, making a board of thirty members.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How much will it increase the expense?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It will decrease it, because no mileage is allowed except from Washington, and that is a very short distance, with very little expense incurred.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What is the basis of payment for expenses—actual expenses?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Actual expenses.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It makes a very considerable saving in proportion to the total cost.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And will probably do more good.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Unquestionably. The work of the Board of Visitors, as constituted, is a mere pleasure trip.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have always so regarded it, and I have generally regarded all kinds of boards of visitors as sort of perfunctory affairs under ordinary conditions, and probably this may lapse into that innocuous condition or status in the future, but I have no objection if it saves some money.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The proviso is that the actual expenses for traveling shall be paid only from Washington and return.

Mr. PERKINS. It does not provide for mileage?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No.

Mr. ESCH. As it is now the Board of Visitors visits the academy at the close of the school year?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. Is that a time when the work of the academy can be best observed and criticised?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Not while it is in operation. It has the advantage of seeing the examination and the finale, and it is when they are keyed up to their best to show what has been done. On the other hand, if the committee really wants to know how the work is done at West Point, and should be done, they should see it at some other time.

Mr. ESCH. That is where I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the ordinary Military Academy bill, and except for clerical errors that will have to be corrected by amendment is absolutely sound and proper in every respect. The only amendment referred to by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], who has charge of the bill, makes practical the visit of the Board of Visitors to the academy to investigate and report to Congress. Hitherto it has been a mere annual picnic of a very pleasant but expensive character. This substitutes members from the legislating committees of the two Houses and requires them to attend the academy during the working period, and not at the end of the session, when everything is on parade and for show. It is entirely practical. So far as I am advised, every gentleman who is on the committee and who has ever been there as a member of the Board of Visitors, or who has been there during the session of Congress and during the working period of the academy, is convinced of the propriety of the legislation. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD].

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am accused by my colleague from the Springfield (Ohio) district of introducing a veteran pension bill for buncombe or political purposes, to advance my political interests. I am attacked in almost six pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, misrepresented, misquoted, and maligned as I have never been before in my very long life, and that, too, without any provocation whatever.

I expect my advocacy of the measure of relief for the veterans of the civil war excited the envy of the Ohio Member, who, I am creditably informed, wishes to be recognized as the only soldier of any account on this floor. Before his onslaught, and for the comforts of peace, I would readily and cheerfully have admitted that he is the only soldier of either party from Ohio merely upon the theory that he admits it himself.

I am charged with attacking the committees of Congress, and with attacking Members on the other side of this Chamber, and my colleague coins out of his muddled brains whole sentences that I never uttered. I have no time to reply to six pages of gross and malignant slanders, either of myself or the great army of comrades I have the honor to represent. A few specimen illustrations will suffice. I am charged by my colleague with saying that unless my pension bill is passed Bryan will be elected President. When I denied that I had ever criticised any Republican Member, and denied that I had even mentioned Bryan's name in my speech, my colleague replied that I had better read my own speech. When I called him down again and challenged him, he called upon the Speaker to protect him. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I only want to ask one question. Mr. SHERWOOD. I have no time.

What can any honorable gentleman think of a Member of Congress, lost to all sense of fair play, who will deliberately coin a statement, knowing it to be false, and when challenged to produce the evidence and told to his face at close range that he was not telling the truth, appeal to the Speaker for protection and still print his false statements in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to be sent broadcast to the country?

My colleague claims that my pension bill is not a pension bill, because it provides that the veterans to be favored are made a roll of honor. He thinks that there can be no roll of honor among men who stood behind the guns. In his view the roll of honor belongs only to soldiers like himself, who rode on horseback and wore stars. I will not argue that question here. Let me quote a letter just received from Colonel Wood, of Newark, Ohio, who served in the ranks during the war, and now holds the title of colonel in the fraternal order of the Grand Army of the Republic. Colonel Wood is a lifelong Republican and the most prominent candidate for Congress in the Seventeenth Ohio District. I read the letter:

WOOD & WOOD, ATTORNEYS,
Newark, Ohio, April 30, 1908.

COMRADE SHERWOOD: I have just read KEIFER's attack on you and your bills. He always has been one of the officers who thought they were the guardians of the old private soldiers. Equal rights never enters his head. The officer is the one thing.

He can find fault with your bill. Finding fault is cheap business. It can be done on less capital than any business I know of—and that is one reason why so many are engaged in the business of finding fault and never suggesting any remedy. Now, the substance of his speech is to convince us old soldiers that the Republican party has done all it can or will for us. I am a Republican—by birth and not a convert for office—never held any office, and never want to carry that honor.

You have done more to bring the importance of pension business to the front than any other man, and finding fault with you will not make votes for our Republican party. Our worst enemies are those old Union soldiers who have always held office, and assume to be guardians of the old cripples and widows, and condemn us for asking for a little reward on services rendered to the country. I never could see how a Union soldier could vote a Democratic ticket, but since I read KEIFER's criticism of you and your bills I, with other soldiers here, can see a few reasons why they stray from the path of virtue and vote for and follow a brave old soldier like yourself, who stands up and demands equal rights.

D. W. WOOD.

[Applause and laughter.]

I think Colonel Wood is right. There is an autocracy of sentiment among a certain class of officers who are out of all sympathy with the men of the rank and file, and, as an old soldier writes me:

KEIFER has strutted around three hundred and sixty-five days every year for twenty-five years in a swallow-tailed coat, as a badge of his superiority, and has no sympathy for the common soldier.

[Laughter and applause.]

I stated in my speech of February 26 that the movement for a pension for the veterans was a spontaneous movement. This is literally true. Of all the petitions filed—and I exhibited on the floor of this House on February 26 the greatest array ever before presented by any Member—the Member from Springfield was not able to find in all his days of delving a single printed petition.

Again, the Member from Springfield says these petitions are not representative because they include soldiers who did not serve eighteen months. So much the better for that. If the short-term men, forty-three years after the war, are willing to petition for justice for the old boys who bore the brunt of the battle through a four-years war, it is well and good. My colleague's idea of patriotism is that it is like himself—purely selfish. [Laughter.] This is a mistake.

Before I came to this Congress I put the dollar-a-day pension bill before twelve soldier organizations, including three county organizations and two of the largest and strongest Grand Army of the Republic posts in Ohio. After a full discussion of all of the provisions of the bill, the short-term soldiers, the ninety-day men, and the one-hundred-day men stood up and voted for the bill unanimously, alongside of the veterans. My colleague indorses the age pension, without service, but is opposed to recognizing the veterans by additional legislation. Under the act of February 6, 1907, age pensions are granted, service being no consideration under this law.

Thousands and thousands of soldiers who went into the Army in 1864, from 16 to 17 years old, went through the famous Atlanta campaign, fought in over thirty battles, and were over one hundred days under fire, can get no pension whatever under the age pension. My bill takes care of all of them at $1 per day. My colleague claims that my bill is not properly drawn. It was drawn by Capt. Wesley S. Thurston, of Toledo, a better lawyer and a closer student than the able-bodied Springfield critic, although not so explosive and loquacious an advocate. And, with the positive proof in hand of another absolutely false statement of my colleague, I am done. I am charged with the statements of the number of petitions of the Soldiers' Homes. My only statements are in my speech of February 26, 1908, now on my desk, and the largest number stated by me on any Soldiers' Home petitions was 640, from the Soldiers' Home of Hampton, Va. I never even mentioned any petition from the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio. Hence the statement that I mentioned 6,000 soldiers at Dayton is a malignant falsehood for which there is no possible excuse. I filed the petitions just as received.

The names on the petitions show just how many signed. No one could possibly be deceived. No one knows this any better than the able-bodied Member from Springfield. And yet when I called him down and corrected him in reference to these petitions he declined to yield. But he has only injured himself and lost his standing with all worthy veterans. The letters coming to me daily are evidence of that fact. Here are some resolutions passed unanimously by the strongest body of old soldiers outside the Grand Army of the Republic, all, or nearly all, Republicans of Lucas County; and they are not only unanimous, but voluntary. I never knew of the action of this body of representative Republican soldiers until I received a copy of the resolutions. They express the sentiments of the veterans everywhere.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE EX-SOLDIERS AND MARINES'
PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION OF LUCAS COUNTY, OHIO,
Toledo, Ohio, May 3, 1908.

Gen. I. R. SHERWOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR AND COMRADE: At a regular meeting of this association, held this date, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas the public press of the country have for the last few days contained reports of a speech delivered by the Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER, of Ohio, in the United States House of Representatives in opposition to the passage of the $1-a-day bill, introduced by Gen. I. R. SHERWOOD, in which speech Representative KEIFER denounced said bill as a curiosity and a fraud: Therefore

"Resolved by the Lucas County ex-Soldiers, Sailors, and Marines' Protective Association, of Toledo, Ohio, That we condemn such remarks on the part of Congressman KEIFER as unjust, unwarranted, and unpatriotic, and libel becoming the gentleman to whom they are attributed; and be it further

"Resolved, That this association most heartily indorses said $1-a-day pension bill as the most just and meritorious measure of the kind yet introduced in Congress, and its favorable consideration should not be delayed."

Yours, very truly, C. CRAMER, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER: I yield one minute more.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Here is a leading Republican paper printed in the district I have the honor to represent. It is conceded the ablest Republican weekly in the Ninth District. The editorial quoted is from the issue of May 8, after the malignant and unfair speech of the Springfield Member had been read and digested:

It is a safe bet that at least 90 per cent of the old soldiers in this Congressional district will vote to return General SHERWOOD to Congress. We would not be surprised if the percentage was even greater. The General has made good in all lines, and especially so in matters that are of great interest to the boys of '61.

And now a word in reply to the statement that I have made my dollar-a-day pension bill a political asset. I was nominated for Congress in October, 1906, thirty days before the November election.

At the previous Congressional election the Republican plurality in the district on Member of Congress was 18,640. I was elected without the aid of a campaign manager or a campaign secretary or treasurer, with no campaign fund and not a single daily newspaper, and I never mentioned to an editor, soldier, or anybody else that I ever intended to introduce any pension bill whatever, nor wrote a letter to a soldier asking for his support—never appealed to soldiers either on the stump or in the newspapers asking for support. This disposes of this mean and contemptible charge of the Member from Springfield. [Laughter and applause.]

And now I have a proposition to make, and am prepared to make good. If the Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER will appear in my district ten times, and deliver the speech he made in Congress, printed in the Record of April 28, 1908, I will pay him $50 a night. This would give him $500, leaving me $100 to print handbills and for halls, or $600 in the aggregate—about what my campaign cost in 1906. It will be equal to Ten Nights in a Barroom. [Prolonged laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I yield one minute more.

Mr. SHERWOOD. All fair-minded Members of this House must agree that there was no possible excuse for the malignant attack of the Springfield Member. I am charitable enough to concede something to his mental and moral decadence, so apparent on both sides of this Chamber. [Laughter.] But this does not suffice. I am called upon to show that in his earlier career he went wrong.

I do not refer to his bill to reduce representation in the South, which he has yearly introduced to secure favor with his colored constituents, and which, as I learn, has never even been argued by him before any appropriate committee—simply a gold brick handed down to fool his colored voters—but I refer to the time he was honored with the Speakership and left that office under a cloud of suspicion, and was compelled by public opinion to seek oblivion from the public gaze for almost a quarter of a century. I am glad he was returned to public life after a new generation came into politics. I am glad he was forgiven. I believe that all punishments should be reformatory. [Laughter.]

What is the record of this gentleman who, without any excuse or any provocation whatever, charged me with introducing a pension bill to deceive and betray my old comrades. Let us see.

I have here a report of a select committee of the Forty-eighth Congress on a question of moment. There is both a majority and minority report. This was over the notorious McGarrahan bill, when Mr. KEIFER was Speaker, and, as the evidence covers 398 pages, I can only make a brief reference. There are no politics in this contention. Gen. H. V. Boynton and Gen. J. WARREN KEIFER were under investigation, both prominent Republicans, the former dean of the press gallery and ranking high as both soldier and citizen. In this Congressional document, the majority report, signed by three members of the Congressional committee—Messrs. J. H. Hopkins, Thomas B. Ward and J. J. Adams—found General Boynton truthful and reliable, and convicted General KEIFER of false testimony and perjury, on the evidence of seven creditable witnesses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have printed, if there is no objection, another page.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I object to adding anything to what has been said. I am in charge of this bill and I should have objected in the beginning to what was being done under the guise of debate. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I have a right to speak.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in order. The gentleman is entitled to the floor in his own right.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I should have objected, except I was requested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] most earnestly not to object. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] desires any time now I will yield it to him.

Mr. KEIFER. No, Mr. Speaker; I do not desire time to reply to such a speech as that now.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRADLEY] such time as he may desire, not to exceed five minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the House at length in relation to the great need for adequate educational facilities for 230 soldiers' children resident at West Point, but as time does not permit a proper and full presentation of the subject, I shall confine myself to a mere formal statement and request. Mr. Speaker, that due respect and courtesy may be shown toward the 1907 Board of Visitors authorized by the Fifty-ninth Congress, on motion of the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, to investigate and report in regard to school facilities for soldiers' children at West Point, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the 1907 Board of Visitors, only so far as it pertains to the school question, be inserted in the Record in continuation of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert certain matters in his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York couples with his request a request that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] may complete in the Record a statement he desires to make this morning, I shall not object. Otherwise I do object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the committee I ask unanimous consent that all Members who speak on the bill have permission to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all Members who speak upon this bill shall have unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I am glad the objection comes from that side and not our side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will please be in order. The gentleman from New Jersey has the floor. The gentleman from New York a little later will get it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I did not know the gentleman from New Jersey had the floor.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the gentleman from New Jersey still has the floor.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Has the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRADLEY] been granted? The gentleman from New York asked unanimous consent to put in a statement of the Board of Visitors with reference to school facilities for soldiers' children at West Point.

The SPEAKER. And objection was made.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey reserves the remainder of his time.

Mr. SULZER. How much time has the gentleman from New Jersey remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey has nine minutes and the gentleman from New York has four minutes.

Mr. SULZER. I yield two minutes of that time to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, this is an appropriation bill carrying an appropriation of over $800,000, with increases of salary in it, with new legislation in it, and it is called up here under suspension of the rules, without opportunity to have it considered in any way or make a point of order against any of the provisions in the bill which are subject to the point of order. This is a new departure in legislation, and therefore this side of the House at least should vote against this bill under the circumstances under which it is brought up. I yield back to the gentleman from New York the balance of my time.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from New Jersey will now use a part of his time.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not desire to use any more time unless, perhaps, to reply to something that is said.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I shall take advantage of this occasion to speak for the toilers of our country—for the rights of the men who create the wealth of our land, for those worthy citizens of the Republic, the American workmen—who have made us all that we are, and will make us, if we are true to ourselves, all that we hope to be—the greatest and the grandest and the freest and the most prosperous people the world has ever seen.

No man, in my opinion, can pay too high a tribute to "labor." It is the creative force of the material world, the genius of accomplishment of the brain and the brawn of the land, the spirit of all progress, and the milestones marking the advance of man. Civilization owes everything to labor—to the constructive toiler and the creative worker. Labor owes very little to civilization. Mother Earth is labor's best friend. From her forests and her fields, from her rocks and her rivers, the toiler has wrought all and brought forth the wonders of the world.

Labor is not of to-day, or of yesterday, or of to-morrow. It is eternal. Dynasties come and go, governments rise and fall, centuries succeed centuries, but labor goes on forever. Labor is the everlasting law of life.

Tear down your palaces and your temples and labor will replace them; close every avenue of trade and commerce and labor will reopen them; destroy your towns and your cities and labor will rebuild them greater and grander than they were; but destroy labor, and famine will stalk the land, and pestilence will decimate the human race. If every laborer in the world should cease work for ninety days, it would cause the greatest catastrophe that ever befell mankind—a tragedy to the human race impossible to depict and too frightful to contemplate.

Mr. Speaker, let us be just to labor. Let us do something for labor. I am now, always have been, and always will be the friend of the toilers—of the farmers, and the wage-earners of America—of those who earn their bread in the sweat of their face. The record of my life, in the legislature of my State, and in the Congress of the United States, will prove the truth and the sincerity of these words.

My sympathies are all with the poor, with the oppressed, and with the unfortunate. My heart goes out to those who toil and struggle. I know in the long race of life's tempestuous battle only the few win, that the many lose heart, become discouraged, and give up the fight in hopeless despair.

During the five years I was a member of the assembly of the State of New York, I introduced and passed many bills, which are now laws, in the interest of labor, and for the amelioration of our workmen. I am proud of that record, and I am glad to know that my efforts in the New York legislature, and in Congress, for the wage-earners have always been appreciated by them.

I have been a Member of the House of Representatives for nearly fourteen years. During that time I have done my best for the workers of America—for the brain and the brawn of our land. Unfortunately, since I have been a Member of Congress, I have always been in a hopeless minority, and while I could construct and urge the passage of beneficial legislation, demanded by labor throughout the country, I could not always succeed in writing the laws desired by the producers on the Federal statute books. However, I am never discouraged—the battle for the right will go on and on until justice is done, and the cause of the right triumphs over prejudice and might and cunning.

I stand now where I always have stood, and where I always will stand—for the rights of the toilers, for justice to the workmen of our country whose labor creates all wealth, and I will continue in the future, as I have in the past, to do all in my power to advance their prosperity and to promote their material welfare.

Ever since I have been a Member of Congress I have struggled to pass a bill which I introduced making eight hours a legal working-day. Organized labor from one end of this land to the other favors this bill, but the opposition to it has been so great that its true friends have never been able to pass it. It is a good bill and it ought to pass.

In my judgment no man in this country ought to be compelled to work more than eight hours a day. I want to see, and I hope the day is not far distant when we all shall see, an eight-hour law written on the statute books of our land and rigidly enforced in every State, in every city, in every town, and in every village in the country. I believe it will be beneficial to the laborer, advantageous to the community in which he lives, and for the best interest of the Government. Too long hours make the wage-earner a poor workman. Shorter hours, in my opinion, will produce better results.

I am and always have been an advocate of shorter hours for a legal working-day. It is in harmony with the spirit of the times. The hours constituting a legal day's work should keep step with the progress of invention in labor-saving machinery. The history of the past teaches us that every reduction in the hours constituting a day's work has resulted beneficially. These reductions in the hours of labor have decreased intemperance, increased knowledge, made better homes, happier and better-clothed wives and children, brighter and more prosperous fire-sides, and in every way benefited the social relations, promoted happiness and contentment, and improved the moral, economical, and financial condition of the producing masses of our land.

This bill and many others in the interest of our toilers are the salutary reforms now demanded by the plain people of our Republic and will surely come in time. But we must be ever alert, ever on guard, to secure them. If eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, then eternal agitation is the price of every legislative reform. We must organize and agitate. The war for justice is a never-ending struggle.

I want to see labor secure its just rights and a more equitable distribution of the fruits of toil. It can only be accomplished through the enactment and administration of just laws. The law is the shield of the wage-earners—the sheet anchor of the toiler.

Labor makes no war on vested rights. It does not rail at honestly acquired wealth. It is not antagonistic to legitimate capital. It would close no door to opportunity. It would darken no star of hope. It would not palsy initiation nor paralyze ambition. It stands for the rights of man; for the greatness of individualism; for equal rights to all and special privileges to none; and so I declare that capital and labor must be friends, not enemies. They should act in harmony, not antipathy. Their interests should be mutual, not antagonistic. In our complex civilization each is essential to the other, and they should walk hand in hand. To prosper, they must be at peace, not at war. Each is necessary to the other. Both have their rights and both have their limitations. The inherent rights of labor are as sacred as the vested rights of capital. Labor makes capital—creates all wealth—and should have, to say the least, equal opportunities and as much consideration; but the trouble seems to be that labor does not receive a fair share of what it produces. It is the duty of the legislator to see to it that there is less centralization of wealth and a more equitable distribution of the fruits of toil.

Mr. Speaker, there are several bills now pending in Congress to do something to ameliorate the condition of the wage-earners of our country, and I had indulged the hope that we would have an opportunity to vote for some of these meritorious measures ere this session adjourned, but it seems the friends of the toilers are again destined, by the inexorable decrees of the powers that be, to bitter disappointment. These bills for labor are all securely pigeonholed in the committees, and they will never be reported, never passed, never enacted into laws, until labor asserts itself at the ballot box and demands its just rights through the agency of the elective franchise.

It is well known to my colleagues that I have prepared and introduced and advocated many bills in the interest of the toilers and the wage-earners of our land. A few have been passed, but only a few. It is a sad commentary on the recent legislative history of Congress that so much has been done for the few and so little, so very little, for the many; so easy to pass a bad bill; so hard to pass a good bill. This is the fault I find with the legislation of the day, and it is a serious fault that must be condemned by every patriotic citizen of our country.

We should legislate for the benefit of all the people, meet the expectations of the toilers of the land, and listen to the just demands of the wage-earners of our country.

In this connection I want to call the attention of the House to a bill I prepared and introduced in the last Congress and in this Congress—a bill "to establish a Department of Labor," with a Secretary having a seat in the Cabinet of the President. This bill is not antagonized by capital and is favored by the toilers and producers of the country. It is a simple measure that excites no opposition from any source. It recognizes the omnipotence of labor, the dignity of the producers, and the greatness of the creators of wealth. It should be speedily enacted into law. It is a short bill, and I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20587) to establish a Department of Labor.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be at the seat of government an executive department known as the "Department of Labor," and a Secretary of Labor, who shall be the head thereof, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $12,000 per annum, and whose term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the other Executive Departments; and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such Department, and the provisions of Title IV of the Revised Statutes, including all amendments thereto, are hereby made applicable to said Department.

Sec. 2. That there shall be in said Department six assistant secretaries, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to wit:

A First Assistant Secretary, whose duty it shall be to supervise all matters relating to labor engaged in the manufacturing industry.

A Second Assistant Secretary, whose duties shall be to supervise all matters relating to labor engaged in the agricultural industry.

A Third Assistant Secretary, whose duties shall be to supervise all matters relating to labor engaged in the building of highways and the transportation industry, including telephone and telegraph business.

A Fourth Assistant Secretary, whose duties shall be to supervise all matters relating to labor employed in the mining industry.

A Fifth Assistant Secretary, whose duties shall be to supervise all matters relating to labor engaged in the building industry.

A Sixth Assistant Secretary, whose duty it shall be to supervise all matters relating to labor engaged in the mercantile industry.

Sec. 3. That there shall be a branch of this Department, to be known as the "bureau of fisheries," under the direction of a commissioner of fisheries, who shall have charge of all matters relating to labor engaged in the fishing industry.

Sec. 4. That the salary of each of the Assistant Secretaries of Labor shall be $5,000 per annum, and the salary of the commissioner of fisheries shall be $3,000 per annum.

Sec. 5. That there shall be one chief clerk, a disbursing clerk, and such other clerical assistants as may be from time to time authorized by Congress, and such number of inspectors and special agents as may be provided for by Congress.

Sec. 6. That it shall be the duty of the Department of Labor to promote such improvements in the social, political, and economic conditions of the wealth-producing laborers of the United States as shall tend to secure to them their natural rights to the opportunity to labor, and to security in the possession and enjoyment of the full fruits of their work.

Sec. 7. That there shall be established in each of the principal divisions of the Department of Labor a bureau of statistics, which shall collect and report at least once each year, and oftener if necessary, the fullest possible statistics of the condition of labor in each of the different industries.

Sec. 8. That special attention shall be given by this Department to the collection and publication, at least monthly, of the fullest possible statistics of the unemployed.

Sec. 9. That statistics of the total production of wealth and the proportion received by labor, and of the distribution and ownership of wealth and land, shall be carefully collected and published at frequent intervals.

Sec. 10. That the Secretary of Labor shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his Department; and to this end said Secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the bureaus provided for his Department and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same as may be deemed desirable in the public interests; and said Secretary shall also have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them; and said Secretary of Labor may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

Sec. 11. That the existing Bureau known as the Department of Labor and the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and all matters relating to Chinese immigration, shall be transferred to the Department of Labor. The present office of Commissioner of Labor is hereby abolished, and all the power, duties, records, and business of his present Department shall be transferred to the Department of Labor.

Sec. 12. That the official records and papers now on file in and pertaining exclusively to the business of any bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service in this act transferred to the Department of Labor, together with the furniture now in use in such bureau, office, department, or branch of the public service, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to the Department of Labor.

Sec. 13. That the Secretary of Labor shall have charge, in the buildings or premises occupied by or appropriated to the Department of Labor, of the library, furniture, fixtures, records, and other property pertaining to it or hereafter acquired for use in its business; he shall be allowed to expend for periodicals and the purposes of the library and for rental of appropriate quarters for the accommodation of the Department of Labor within the District of Columbia, and for all other incidental expenses, such sums as Congress may provide from time to time: Provided, however, That where any office, bureau, or branch of the public service transferred to the Department of Labor by this act is occupying rented buildings or premises it may still continue to do so until other suitable quarters are provided for its use: And provided further, That all officers, clerks, and employees now employed in any of the bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service in this act transferred to the Department of Labor are each and all hereby transferred to said Department at their present grades and salaries, except where otherwise provided in this act: And provided further, That all laws prescribing the work and defining the duties of the several bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service by this act transferred to and made a part of the Department of Labor shall, so far as the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act, remain in full force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

Sec. 14. That there shall be a solicitor of the Department of Justice for the Department of Labor, whose salary shall be $4,500 per annum, and an assistant solicitor for each of the Assistant Secretaries of the Department of Labor, each at a salary of $3,000 per annum.

Sec. 15. That the Secretary of the Department of Labor shall have power to appoint boards of arbitration and conciliation wherever the interests of industrial peace may require it to be done.

Sec. 16. That all power and authority heretofore possessed or exercised by the head of any executive department over any bureau, office, branch, or division of the public service by this act transferred to the Department of Labor, or any business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, whether of appellate or revisory character or otherwise, shall hereafter be vested in and exercised by the head of the said Department of Labor; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are, so far as inconsistent, hereby repealed.

Sec. 17. That the Secretary of Labor shall annually, at the close of each fiscal year, make a report in writing to Congress, giving an account of all moneys received and disbursed by him and his Department, and describing the work done by the Department in fostering, promoting, and developing the various industries under the supervision of this Department and making such recommendations as he shall deem necessary for the effective performance of the duties and purposes of the Department. He shall also, from time to time, make such special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President, or by either House of Congress, or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

Sec. 18. That a person to be designated by the Secretary of State shall be appointed to formulate, under his direction, for the instruction of consular officers, the requests of the Secretary of Labor, and to prepare from the dispatches of consular officers, for transmission to the Secretary of Labor, such information as pertains to the work of the Department of Labor, and such persons shall have the rank and salary of a chief of bureau, and be furnished with such clerical assistance as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of State.

Sec. 19. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, the bill speaks for itself, and every provision in it is self-explanatory. It is a nonpartisan measure, and every Republican and every Democrat in Congress can consistently vote for it if he wants to be just to the producers of our country and to the toilers of our land. Take it all in all, it is a comprehensive measure, drawn to meet the exigency of the times, demanded by the workers of America, approved by every labor organization in the land; and if it were written on our statute books, it would have a most salutary effect, go far to harmonize friction between labor and capital, and do much to solve existing and future industrial problems. As Samuel Gompers, the farseeing president of the American Federation of Labor, most wisely declares in his able argument in favor of the bill—

It is earnestly hoped that the bill for the creation of the Department of Labor, introduced by Mr. SULZER, of New York, may pass and prove a lasting benefit to all our people. No keen observer disputes that the all-absorbing and burning question of our time is expressed in the terms "the labor question." In the effort to establish the rightful relation of the workers to society, in the production of wealth, and in its distribution, are encompassed all the complex questions of our lives. That justice should be meted out to all workers no thoughtful man will deny. Anything which is not based upon ethical considerations for all no intelligent trade unionist asks.

Questions often arise in the official family of the President of the United States in which justice, fair dealing, ethics, and the law and its administration must frequently be under consideration, and, unless there is some representative of the workers competent to speak in their name, to advocate their cause, to convey to the Executive head and his advisers the laborer's side of labor's contention, he and they must be deprived of valuable and far-reaching information. It is to supply this present deficiency that the American Federation of Labor has asked for, and should repeat and increase its efforts to secure, the enactment by Congress of a law creating a department of labor, with a secretary who shall have a seat in the President's Cabinet.

There are some who are advocating the passage of a law creating a department of industry and commerce, with a secretary at its head, providing for him a seat in the President's Cabinet. The several propositions which have been submitted all subordinate and minimize the question of labor and even the present Federal Bureau of Labor. Against such a plan we have entered, and should again emphatically enter, our protest. As a matter of fact, without a single exception, the members of the Cabinet are now representatives of the employers' and business men's side of industry, commerce, and finance.

And Henry B. Martin, the well-known secretary of the American Antitrust League, in his eloquent argument in favor of the bill before the Committee on Labor, said:

Why is there a need for this fuller and fairer recognition of labor in the affairs of the Government of the United States? I think the reason is clear and plain. It is because the whole prosperity and progress of the United States is dependent upon the freedom and justice and equity with which we treat the laboring masses and because of the resulting increase of prosperity which always follows. The fairer and juster and more liberal conditions of labor in the country, the greater is the prosperity and welfare of the nation. One of the most important reasons why labor should have this fuller recognition in our Government is the fact that we need a more thorough and accurate knowledge by the Government and the people as a whole, through the instrumentality of the Government, of the condition of labor affairs in the country.

There can be no question, I believe, in the mind of any careful observer of present conditions but that there is need at this time in the United States for a fuller and fairer recognition of labor, its rights and its interests. This bill introduced by Congressman WILLIAM SULZER "to establish a Department of Labor" is the longest step in that direction which has ever been proposed to be taken in our country. It is in line with similar legislation in all the advanced and enlightened countries of the world. The placing of labor as a part of the community on an equality with the other branches of the nation by recognition in the shape of an Executive Department, with a Cabinet officer to sit at the council board of the President for the consideration of all the great executive business of the country, is a measure that will be productive, I am sure, of wide and lasting and permanent benefit, not only to labor, but to all other elements of our national life.

Mr. Speaker, my bill to establish "a Department of Labor" means progress along the road of industrial peace. Capital should favor it, as well as labor. For years this legislation has been advocated by the wage-earners of the country. The bill meets with their approbation and has the approval of the best thought in our land. It has been indorsed by some of the ablest thinkers, some of the wisest political economists, and many of our leading newspapers. The time is ripe, it seems to me, for the creation of a Department of Labor with a Secretary having a seat in the Cabinet, with all the rights and powers conferred by this bill. It will bring labor and capital closer together, and one is dependent on the other. They should be friends—not enemies—and walk hand in hand in the march of progress along the highways of mutual prosperity. This bill, if it becomes a law, will go far to prevent serious labor troubles in the future, do much to solve existing labor problems, and every friend of industrial peace should aid in its enactment. The employers of labor as well as the employees themselves, whether they belong to trades unions or not, are all, so far as I have been able to ascertain, in accord with the principles of this progressive legislation and heartily approve of this bill.

I shall fight for the principles embodied in this bill, and continue to advocate its passage until it is enacted into law. It is just and right, and sooner or later it will be the law of the land.

I stand for the rights of man. I am an individualist, and I want to open the door of opportunity to every individual in the land. I want to do all I can to make the world better and kinder and happier and more prosperous. I believe in the dignity of labor, and I want to do everything I can as a legislator to protect its inherent rights and promote its best interests for the lasting benefit of all the people of the country. I want labor to have as much standing as capital in the halls of Congress and at the seat of government. We have a Department to represent war; we have a Department to represent diplomacy; we have a Department to represent our internal affairs; we have a Department to represent commerce; we have a Department to represent justice—all supported by the wage-earners, and in the name of common sense why should we not have a department to represent industrial peace as exemplified by labor, the most important in its last analysis of them all? The creation of this Department of Labor will be a long step in the right direction in the new century's progress for harmony and for industrial peace, and through its agency, in my judgment, many perplexing problems can be quickly solved in a way that will do substantial justice and be fair to all concerned.

Mr. Speaker, labor wants a fair show, an equal chance, a square deal—in Congress and out of Congress. Labor is indefatigable, unselfish, and consistent. It does not ask for more than its just rights. We hear much about equality before the law. That is all labor wants. It seeks no special privileges. A labor union is not a trust—it is a voluntary association for mutual benefit. It has no stock, pays no dividends, but stands for equal rights to all. Labor has as much right to combine and organize as capital. The right of a man to labor is inalienable, and the right of a man to quit work is just as undeniable. Neither capital nor labor has the right to take the law in its own hands. If capital does wrong or commits crime, that is no reason why labor should do wrong or commit crime, or vice versa. Two wrongs never did and never will make a right. In a government such as ours, the reign of law must not and will not give way to the reign of force.

The best advice that any friend and the most ardent sympathizer can give labor, organized or otherwise, in its struggle for its just rights, for better conditions, for greater progress, and for a more equitable distribution of its fruits, is obey the law. Labor's only hope is here. This is a land of liberty, but it is now, ever was, and always will be, liberty under law.

Sir, after mature reflection, I am of the conviction that the great army of industrial workers, from one end of the land to the other, should be represented in the administrative branch of the Government, so that their rights at all times can be explained, their interests protected, their wants made known, and their grievances discussed intelligently in the Cabinet of the President.

This bill is a meritorious measure and it should be a law. It is the first bill, I believe, ever introduced in Congress to create a Department of Labor. I am informed it is the first attempt to systematically classify labor that has ever been presented in a bill in Congress, and its enactment into law will evidence a disposition on the part of the Government to see to it that labor gets full recognition, the dignity of having a voice in the councils of State, and the opportunity to have its claims dispassionately discussed for a fairer distribution of its products. Give labor this boon, and the "labor question" will be reduced to the minimum.

The expense of maintenance of the Department of Labor will practically be but little more than the expense for the maintenance of the various bureaus at the present time. These bureaus will all be in the Department of Labor. I do not think anyone will take exception to the bill on the ground that it is going to increase the expenses of the Government. A few thousand dollars in a matter of so much moment as this will be of little consequence. I believe that if this bill, or one along similar lines, were on the statute books to-day it would be a long step toward better social, economical, and industrial conditions; a progressive advance along the avenues of internal peace; that it would go far to allay jealousy, establish harmony, promote the general welfare, make the employer and employee better friends, prevent strikes, and lockouts, and boycotts, and business paralysis, and every year save millions and millions of dollars of losses which result necessarily therefrom. The toilers of the land will never be satisfied until this right to a seat in the administrative branch of the Government is allowed. They are entitled to it and they should have it. Let us grant it to them now, because now is the accepted time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in connection with my speech some data favorable to my bill to establish a Department of Labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the Record data favorable to his bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The resolutions and comments in favor of the bill are as follows:

The American Federation of Labor, in national convention, adopted the following:

"Resolved, That the American Federation, through its executive council, devise means and put into execution some plan whereby the incoming National Administration and the Congress may be urged to consider the advisability of establishing a Department of Labor and the merging of the bureaus alleged to be in the interest of American citizens who are, or desire to be, employed as tradesmen, artisans, mechanics, and laborers, and that, if necessary to accomplish this result, a committee, geographically selected, be hereafter appointed by the president to assist in advancing this and other approved measures.

"Resolved, That each general and local organization embraced in the American Federation of Labor be requested to promote the plans agreed upon in this connection and make appeals to their Representatives in Congress to favorably consider and advocate through this means an aid to peace, prosperity, and patriotism."

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 19, 1908.

To the COMMITTEE ON LABOR,
House of Representatives.

GREETING: This is to certify that District Assembly 66, Knights of Labor, in regular session assembled, have indorsed by unanimous vote a bill introduced by Mr. SULZER, of New York, to establish a Department of Labor, and respectfully petitions your committee to recommend its passage to the Congress.

The chairman of our legislative committee has been instructed to present this petition to your honorable committee in person.

Very respectfully,

H. A. MARTIN,
District Secretary.

Respectfully submitted.

H. J. SCHULTZ,
Chairman Legislative Committee.

THE COMMERCIAL TELEGRAPHERS' UNION OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., March 24, 1908.

Hon. W. SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington D. C.

DEAR SIR: I herewith take great pleasure in indorsing H. R. 20587 to establish a Department of Labor, introduced by you; and inasmuch that you have incorporated the telegraph and telephone therein, it greatly increases the importance thereof and should be enacted into law, or rather passed by the Congress, as it will prove to be of inestimable benefit to labor in general.

I am, very truly, yours,
W. W. BEATTIE, President.

INTERNATIONAL TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION,

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SULZER: I am particularly interested in H. R. 20587, to establish a Department of Labor, introduced by you, and would be pleased to receive the following information:

Noting that the bill has been referred to the Committee on Labor, would you state when, in your judgment, the bill will be operative, provided it meets with the favorable consideration of the committee and the concurrence of the House and Senate?

I assure you that the proposed measure meets with the hearty approval of those who have perused it in this section of the country.

Thanking you for the favor of forwarding me a copy, and trusting to hear from you at an early date, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

T. D. FENNESSY,

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am pleased to hear of the progress which H. R. 20587, your Department of Labor bill, is making in committee. I am too busy to prepare a lengthy statement in favor of the measure, but inclose a few lines, which, voicing the sentiments of many men who are directly interested, may have some little weight with the committee.

Regretting my inability to prepare a more effective statement, I remain,

Yours, very sincerely,

COMMITTEE ON LABOR, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Your committee having granted interested parties an opportunity to submit statements upon H. R. 20587, a bill to create a Department of Labor, introduced by Congressman SULZER of New York, I desire to avail myself of the privilege.

When the bill providing for the establishment of a Department of Commerce and Labor was under consideration organized labor unanimously urged the creation of two separate departments—one of commerce, one of labor. We believed the dual nature of the Department would lessen its efficiency, for, although commerce and labor are closely allied, yet there necessarily exists a wide divergence in the nature of the matters relating to each subject which come under the jurisdiction of the Department.

We believe that the history and experience of the Department since its creation emphasize the correctness of our attitude and justify the enactment of the bill under consideration. Each year the number of wage-workers employed in the manufacturing and commercial industries increases, and the proper regulation of the machinery of production and distribution so that the greatest efficiency may be secured is a matter of greater importance.

To accomplish this work successfully needs a separate department, the staff of which will be able to concentrate its energy and attention exclusively upon the questions affecting labor. Our sister Republic, France, has recognized the need of such a department, and I believe that the interests of employer and employee alike demand that we follow that country's example.

On behalf of the 70,000 members of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, I therefore respectfully urge the committee to give favorable consideration to the bill introduced by the Hon. WILLIAM SULZER.

Respectfully,

J. C. SKEMP, G. S. T.,
Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR—A BILL NOW BEFORE CONGRESS TO HAVE ITS HEAD A MEMBER OF THE PRESIDENT'S CABINET.

Representative WILLIAM SULZER, of New York, has introduced a bill in Congress providing for the establishment of another Department of the Government, the head of which shall have a seat in the President's Cabinet. The new Department is to be known as the "Department of Labor," and its head as the "Secretary of Labor." The head of the Department will be appointed by the President, the same as other members of the Cabinet, with $12,000 a year as compensation. The bill provides for six assistant secretaries, at $5,000. The first secretary to supervise matters of manufacture, one for agricultural industry, another to look after transportation, another mining, another the building industry, and another the mercantile industry. One section of the bill provides "that it shall be the duty of the Department of Labor to promote such improvements in the social, political, and economic conditions of the wealth-producing laborers of the United States as shall tend to secure to them their natural rights to the opportunity to labor and to security in the possession and enjoyment of the full fruits of their work."

A Bureau of Statistics is provided for, and a monthly bulletin showing the number of unemployed, the total production of wealth, and the proportion received by labor. It is proposed by the bill that the present Bureau, known as the "Department of Labor and Bureau of Immigration," be transferred to the proposed new Department, and that the Office of Commissioner of Labor be abolished.

There are to be one solicitor, at $5,000, for the head of the Department and six assistant solicitors, one for each of the assistant secretaries, at $3,000. The secretary of the Department is vested with powers to appoint boards of arbitration.

The bill has met with the unanimous indorsement of the Washington Central Labor Union, with its eighty affiliated bodies and 25,000 members, and has the hearty indorsement of national and international labor leaders here.

UNITED BROTHERHOOD OF CARPENTERS AND JOINERS OF AMERICA,
Indianapolis, March 26, 1908.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have carefully perused your bill, which provides for a separate Cabinet Department, to be known as the "Department of Labor," and I certainly concur in this adjunct to the existing Departments. Labor should be recognized to this extent at least. The Department could do a vast amount of good in collecting and compiling statistics of this most necessary branch of our Government relative to the conditions under which the wage-workers of our country live, as well as the hours they work, the wages they receive, the diseases they are subject to, the risks of life they run in each trade or occupation, the average length of life; the homes they live in, whether tenements, apartments, cottages, garrets, or hovels, whether properly ventilated or whether the sanitation is what is desired, and other matters of interest and information that the Government should be in possession of. We, as laboring men, contribute our share to the wealth and prosperity of the country. We contribute our services that the policies of the Government may be carried out and the weak and defenseless protected at all times. We should therefore have some recognition for the efforts and energies put forth along these lines and for the loyalty shown on all occasions to law and order.

The bill has my indorsement, and I trust that both Houses will give you their support in order that same may become a law.

With kind regards, I am, sincerely, yours,

FRANK DUFFY, General Secretary.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1908.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.

DEAR SIR: At a recent meeting of the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia your bill to establish a Department of Labor (H. R. 20587) was unanimously indorsed, and I was so directed to inform you.

Permit me also to thank you for its introduction, and express the hope that the bill will become a law. It is an important step in the right direction, and such a department would be the means of saving annually to both employee and employer many thousands of dollars, and spare the public much inconvenience now experienced when contentions arise between labor and capital.

Again hoping your bill will become a law, I am,

Respectfully, yours,

SAM DE NEDREY, Secretary.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF BOOKBINDERS,
LOCAL UNION No. 4,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1908.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, New York.

DEAR MR. SULZER: On behalf of my organization, the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, I desire to heartily approve of your bill (H. R. 20587) to establish a Department of Labor. I have carefully read the bill and I believe if you can procure the passage of same it will not only please the millions of workers who are organized, but also the unorganized toilers in every State of our Union.

It is about time that our Government should take some interest in the welfare of our wage-workers. The passage of your bill will assist in stamping out anarchy and radical socialism, and it will give the discontented toilers to understand that the United States Government in its Department of Labor stands ready to educate and assist in every way our toiling masses who produce all the wealth that our country boasts of. I sincerely hope you may be able to get a vote in the House on your bill this session, and as it is a nonpartisan measure there should be no objection to its passage.

With best wishes, I remain, fraternally, yours,

J. L. FEENEY,
Chairman Legislative Committee, Central Labor Union,
President Bookbinders' Union, Local No. 4.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.

MY DEAR SULZER: After going over your bill very thoroughly, I just want to make this comment: Should it become a law, it will do more to prevent industrial strife than any other measure yet undertaken. I base my conclusions upon these facts, and I speak from experience, having been "tangled up" in many strikes and having observed many others from labor's standpoint.

Nine strikes out of every ten could be prevented if some one in authority, some one whom men could feel was friendly toward their just demands, could be called on to effect an adjustment. The rank and file of labor don't want strikes.

The officers of organized labor do not want them either. They—both the men and the officers—will go to the limit to prevent them. They are always forced on them, and in nine out of ten cases by an overbearing, supercilious, or bigoted employer. Were your bill a law the assistant secretary of the different industries could force (through public opinion) these unreasonable employers to make concessions provided, of course, these concessions could be in justice given. On the other hand, he could, in exactly the same way, force unreasonable employees to reasonableness. Much, in fact all its success, would depend upon the officials who were placed in charge of these positions.

I will not go further into detail now, my dear SULZER, but I hope, if it can be done without any embarrassment, that when this bill is before the committee I be allowed to speak for it, for frankly I believe if it becomes a law, and is carried out in the proper spirit, it will mean the elimination of 90 per cent of the industrial disputes of our country.

With best wishes to you, dear sir, I beg to remain,
Very truly, yours,

W. E. KENNEDY.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY].

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, I think it a fair sample of some of the arguments that have come from the other side of this Chamber when the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] complains that he has only twenty minutes in which to discuss this matter, and yielded sixteen minutes of that twenty for a political speech.

Mr. SULZER. It was a good speech, was it not?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Oh, yes; a very good speech. There is very little to discuss in this proposition. It is the routine bill that has been coming here year after year, and every Member is familiar with it. There were changes made necessary by the passage of the military appropriation bill, which added pay to the officers and enlisted men. It was necessary to increase the pay of officers and enlisted men at West Point in order to make that pay correspond with the pay of the other officers. With that exception, there is absolutely but one change in the bill, and that was proposed by a gentleman on the minority side. I think it is a very good change and I am in favor of it. It was a proposition to send a committee from the House of Representatives and the Senate to examine West Point during business hours, at a time when the House was in session, and for the purpose, and the only purpose, of being able to legislate wisely. As I said, that proposition came from a member of the minority, and I heartily agree with him, and I believe the great body of this House heartily agrees with him. Now, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is utter rot to say that we have had no chance to examine this, when it is precisely the routine matters that have been brought forward year after year ever since the academy was instituted, and there is no particular occasion for an investigation. I think the reason that the gentleman ought to give is that he has not had time enough to talk politics on the bill this morning.

I want to say before closing, Mr. Speaker—I will not have time to elaborate it—that I desire to add my views to those expressed by my colleague on the committee from New York [Mr. BRADLEY] that we ought to have made an appropriation for teachers at West Point. It is a burning shame that this great Government, which is able to spend a billion and a half dollars a year is too poor to educate the children of the defenders of the nation. [Applause.] [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, agreeing to the amendment, and passing the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 185, nays 92, answered "present" 12, not voting 98, as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAPRON). The gentleman from Missouri moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to give effect to and execute the provisions of existing legislation authorizing the acquisition of land for sites or the enlargement thereof, and the erection, enlargement, extension, remodeling, or repair of public buildings in the several cities hereinafter enumerated, the limit of cost heretofore fixed by Congress therefor be, and the same is hereby, increased, respectively, as follows, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the completion of each of said buildings within its respective limit of cost, including site:

Sec. 6. That the appropriations made to carry into effect the provisions of legislation authorizing the acquisition of land for sites for public buildings or the enlargement thereof, or for the construction, enlargement, extension, remodeling, or special repairs of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, shall be deemed to be available only for the purposes specifically enumerated in said legislation, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to submit to Congress annually detailed estimates of appropriations necessary for defraying all expenses, both in the Office of the Supervising Architect and in the field, of every kind and character incident to, or requisite for, the administrative work of carrying into effect the provisions of this or subsequent public-building acts, so far as the same relate to public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, such estimates to be in addition to and separate and apart from the estimates of appropriations providing specifically for the salaries of certain officers and employees in the Office of the Supervising Architect; that the appropriations for said administrative work, when made, shall be immediately available for such personal services and all other expenses and supplies, both for office and field work, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order or approve to carry into effect the provisions of this and subsequent acts relating to the acquisition of land for sites or the enlargement thereof, or for the construction, enlargement, extension, remodeling, or special repairs of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, including the annual appropriations under the control of the Supervising Architect: Provided, That such persons as may be regularly appointed and paid from such appropriations shall be subject, in all respects, to the laws, rules, and regulations respecting entrance into or separation from the classified civil service of the United States, and shall be employed only in the Office of the Supervising Architect or in fieldwork of construction and repair under his supervision and control, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually submit to Congress in the Book of Estimates a statement, showing the names of all persons whose salaries or compensation are paid from said appropriations, their duties, and the rate of compensation and the amount paid to each of them, respectively: And provided further, That this act shall not be construed as rendering unavailable for the employment of personal services in the Office of the Supervising Architect, or for any other purpose now authorized by law, any of the appropriations or balances of appropriations made prior to July 1, 1907, for the acquisition of land for sites, or the enlargement thereof, or for the erection, enlargement, extension, remodeling, or special repairs of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, or any of the annual appropriations under the control of the Supervising Architect. And all appropriations made in full or in part subsequent to July 1, 1907, for extension of the limits of cost of public buildings or sites, or for the acquisition of land for sites, or the enlargement thereof, or for the erection, enlargement, extension, remodeling, or special repairs of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, or for any annual appropriation under the control of the Supervising Architect, shall be subject to the provisions hereof.

Sec. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to dispose of the Federal building at Danville, Ill., at such time and in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States; and to cause to be erected upon the site thereof a suitable and commodious building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, for the use of the post-office, United States courts, and other governmental offices in said city, at a limit of cost for said building not to exceed the sum of $225,000. That the new building hereby authorized shall be protected from danger from fire in adjacent structures by an open space of not less than 25 feet on all sides, including streets and alleys, and the open space of 40 feet required by existing law to be preserved for that purpose in connection with the present building is hereby reduced accordingly.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in his discretion, in lieu of the foregoing, to acquire by exchange for the present post-office building and the site thereof a rectangular site at the northeast corner of Harrison and Vermillion streets in said city, having a frontage on Vermillion street of not less than 140 feet, with a depth on Harrison street of at least 148 feet and 6 inches, and to execute on behalf of the United States the necessary conveyances to effect such exchange; and also to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, so much of the remaining frontage on Vermillion street, between Harrison and Madison streets, and having a like depth of not less than 148 feet and 6 inches, as he may deem necessary, to provide a suitable site for the building hereinafter authorized to be erected.

That upon said new site, when acquired as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, United States courts, and other governmental offices in said city, at a total limit of cost of not to exceed $275,000, including such land, if any, as may be acquired in addition to that secured by exchange for the present site.

Sec. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the United States post-office building at Ottumwa, Iowa, to be taken down and a new building to be erected on the site thereof for the accommodation of the United States post-office, courts, and other governmental offices, at a total cost to the Government, including the removal of the present building and the construction of a new building with fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $200,000; including $35,000 authorized by the act of June 30, 1906, which shall be available for this purpose.

Sec. 9. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to sell at private sale to the Florence Lodge, No. 820, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Florence, Ala., the following-described strip or parcel of land, situate and being in the city of Florence, county of Lauderdale, State of Alabama: Beginning on the southerly line to Tombigbee street, in Florence, Ala., at the northeasterly corner of the tract of land purchased by the United States Government from Dwight Devine and others on the 17th day of December, 1903, the deed to which is on record in the office of the probate judge of Lauderdale County, Ala., book No. 67, pages 295, 296, and 297; thence at right angles to said Tombigbee street, southwardly, 100 feet; thence, at right angles, westwardly, 10 feet; thence, northwardly, at right angles, 100 feet to Tombigbee street; thence at right angles, eastwardly, along the said street 10 feet to the point of beginning, which embraces a strip of land 10 feet in width and 100 feet in length off the east side of the Federal building site in Florence, Ala., for such an amount as the Secretary of the Treasury, in his judgment, shall deem to be a fair and just compensation for said property. The Secretary of the Treasury, in the event of such sale, is authorized and directed to execute a quitclaim deed to Florence Lodge, No. 820, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Florence, Ala., conveying all the rights, title, claim, and interest of the United States in or to said above-described strip of land.

Sec. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and building for the United States post-office and other governmental offices at Peekskill, N. Y., at a cost for said site and building of not to exceed $40,000.

That upon the title to said property being vested in the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby further authorized and directed to cause the building so acquired to be altered, remodeled, extended, or repaired for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in said city, including necessary changes in alterations, or remodeling of, or repair to, the heating, ventilating, and plumbing systems in said building at a cost not to exceed $5,000.

Sec. 11. That the provision contained in the act approved June 30, 1906, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for the erection and completion of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and court-house at Little Rock, Ark., upon ground now owned by the United States, at a limit of cost of $125,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury, within said limit of cost, to enter into contracts for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, and improvement of the present post-office and court-house building at Little Rock, Ark.

Sec. 12. That the provision contained in the act approved June 30, 1906, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such additional land as he may deem necessary for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the United States subtreasury building at San Francisco, Cal., at a limit of cost of $375,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site for the United States subtreasury and other governmental offices at San Francisco, Cal., at a cost not to exceed the said sum of $375,000.

Sec. 13. That of the amount authorized in the act approved June 30, 1906, for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices at San Diego, Cal., at a cost not to exceed $150,000, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the purchase of lands in said city to be assigned to the use of the War Department and for removing to such newly acquired land and placing in position the buildings and structures now on block 39, the making of water and sewer connections therewith, the inclosing of said newly acquired land, and other incidental expenses of like character: Provided, That upon the acquisition of such land, block 39, in said city of San Diego, Cal., now owned by the United States and assigned to the uses and purposes of the War Department, shall be assigned to the Treasury Department as the site for the United States post-office and custom-house building authorized by said act approved June 30, 1906.

Sec. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to reduce the open space for fire protection at Newark, Ohio, to 20 feet, to insure the acquisition of a suitable site and the erection thereon of an adequate building for the accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices within the present limit of cost as fixed by the act approved June 30, 1906.

Sec. 15. That section 16 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: "Sec. 16. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell the old custom-house and post-office building and the site thereof, at the corner of Seneca and Washington streets, in the city of Buffalo and State of New York, at public or private sale, after proper advertisement, at such time and on such terms as he may deem to be for the best interests of the United States, and to deposit the proceeds of said sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt: Provided, That said building and site shall not be sold for a sum less than $100,000."

Sec. 16. That a commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, one member of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be designated by the commander in chief of that organization, and a member of the United Spanish War Veterans, to be designated by the commander in chief of that organization, be, and is hereby, created, which shall cause plans and estimates to be prepared for a memorial amphitheater at Arlington, Va., and report the estimated cost thereof to the Congress: Provided, That such plans and estimates be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

And for the expense of said commission a sum not to exceed $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended on vouchers approved by the chairman of said commission.

Sec. 17. That the northerly portion of the Government reservation bounded by B street north, B street south, Seventh street west, and Sixth street west, in the District of Columbia, known as Armory Square, comprising that portion of said square north of a line established for the south front of the buildings for the new National Museum and the new Department of Agriculture, be, and is hereby, selected and dedicated as a site for an armory for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, after the removal of the buildings and tracks of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company from said square.

That a commission consisting of the Assistant Secretary of War, the general commanding the militia of the District of Columbia, and the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, be, and is hereby, created, which shall cause plans and estimates to be prepared for a suitable armory for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and report the estimated cost thereof to the Congress: Provided, That such plans and estimates be prepared under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

And for the expense of said commission a sum not to exceed $2,500 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended on vouchers approved by the chairman of said commission.

Sec. 18. That for the purpose of beginning the construction of a suitable and commodious fireproof building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, United States custom-house, United States courts, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Hawaii, $100,000: Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed as fixing the limit of cost of said building at the sum hereby named, but the building hereby provided for shall be constructed or planned so as to cost, complete, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, but exclusive of site, not exceeding $850,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts for the construction of a suitable building for said purposes, to be designated by said Department, within the ultimate limit of cost above mentioned: Provided, That of the amount fixed as the ultimate limit of cost not to exceed $100,000 may be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Sec. 19. That for the purpose of beginning the construction of a suitable and commodious fireproof building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, United States courts, and other governmental offices at Oklahoma City, Okla., $50,000: Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed as fixing the limit of cost of said building at the sum hereby named, but the building hereby provided for shall be constructed or planned so as to cost, complete, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, but exclusive of site, not exceeding $200,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts for the construction of a suitable building for said purposes, to be designated by said Department, within the ultimate limit of cost above mentioned: Provided, That of the amount fixed as the ultimate limit of cost not to exceed $50,000 may be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Sec. 20. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the United States post-office and court-house building at Shreveport, La., to be taken down and a new building erected on the site thereof for the accommodation of the United States post-office, courts, and other governmental offices, at a total cost to the Government, including the removal of the present building and the construction of a new building with fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $200,000. And the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, reduce the open space for fire protection to 20 feet: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $50,000 may be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Sec. 21. That for the purpose of beginning the construction of a suitable and commodious fireproof building for the accommodation of the United States post-office at Minneapolis, Minn., $100,000: Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed as fixing the limit of cost of said building at the sum hereby named, but the building hereby provided for shall be constructed or planned so as to cost, complete, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, but exclusive of site, not exceeding $500,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts for the construction of a suitable building for said purposes, to be designated by said Department, within the ultimate limit of cost above mentioned: Provided, That of the amount fixed as the ultimate limit of cost not to exceed $100,000 may be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Sec. 22. That for the purpose of beginning the construction of a suitable and adequate fireproof addition to the present Federal building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, United States courts, and other governmental offices at Dayton, Ohio, $60,000: Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed as fixing the limit of cost for said addition at the sum hereby named, but the addition hereby provided for shall be constructed or planned so as to cost, complete, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, but exclusive of site, not exceeding $325,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts for the construction of a suitable addition for said purposes, to be designated by said Department, within the ultimate limit of cost above mentioned: Provided, That of the amount fixed as the ultimate limit of cost not to exceed $60,000 may be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Sec. 23. That for the purpose of beginning the construction of a suitable and commodious fireproof building for the accommodation of the United States post-office at Jersey City, N. J., $100,000: Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed as fixing the limit of cost of said building at the sum hereby named, but the building hereby provided for shall be constructed or planned so as to cost, complete, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, but exclusive of site, not exceeding $350,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts for the construction of a suitable building for said purposes, to be designated by said Department, within the ultimate limit of cost above mentioned: Provided, That of the amount fixed as the ultimate limit of cost not to exceed $100,000 may be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Sec. 24. That for the purpose of beginning the construction of suitable and commodious fireproof buildings, and the acquisition of additional ground, for the accommodation of the United States custom-house and other governmental offices, excepting United States courts and post-office, and for a Government warehouse or appraisers' store building, at Wilmington, N. C., $80,000: Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed as fixing the limit of cost of said buildings and additional ground at the sum hereby named, but the buildings hereby provided for shall be constructed or planned so as to cost, complete, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, approaches, and additional land, not exceeding $280,000.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, said additional ground and to enter into contracts for the construction of suitable buildings for said purposes, to be designated by said Department, within the ultimate limit of cost above mentioned: Provided, That of the amount fixed as the ultimate limit of cost not to exceed $80,000 may be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, further authorized and directed to use for said new buildings the present site of the United States custom-house and warehouse, and to erect thereon suitable buildings for the purposes aforesaid, purchasing ground adjacent thereto for the enlargement of said site; and he is hereby authorized to provide for the use, in the construction of said new buildings, of such of the material composing the present structures as he may deem suitable for the purpose, or, in his discretion, to dispose of the same and to use the proceeds toward the cost of constructing the new buildings; and in case of such sale of the old material the limit of cost heretofore fixed for said new buildings and additional ground is hereby increased by a sum equal to the net proceeds derived from said sale.

SEC. 25. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered in lieu of making additions to the present Federal building at Lynchburg, Va., authorization for which has heretofore been made, to acquire a new Federal building site in the city of Lynchburg, Va., by the exchange of the present post-office and court-house building and the site thereof in said city for a portion of the land and improvements thereon belonging to the city of Lynchburg, commonly known as the "warehouse property," having a frontage of 132 feet on Church street and 182 feet on Tenth street, and to execute the necessary conveyances therefor to said city upon the payment to the United States by said city of a sum not less than $70,000, and the furnishing, free of cost to the United States, of such abstracts, official certifications, evidences of title, and deeds of conveyance as, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, may be necessary to vest in the United States a good and valid title to said property. That upon said new site, if acquired as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected a suitable and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, United States courts, and other governmental offices in said city, at a total limit of cost of not to exceed $220,000, and the unexpended balances of any authorization heretofore made for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improving of the present post-office and court-house building in the city of Lynchburg, together with such sum as may be received from said city, as heretofore provided, be, and the same are hereby, authorized to be applied and made available to carry into effect the provisions of this section, and no further authorization therefor is made: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, proceed, if he deems best, with the improvement and enlargement of the present Federal building within the limit of cost heretofore fixed.

SEC. 26. That a commission be, and the same is hereby, created, to consist of five members, namely, the Secretary of War, the Attorney-General, the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the United States Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the United States House of Representatives, for the purpose of investigating the title of the United States in and to all lands in the District of Columbia, with a view to protecting such title, filing a map of said lands, and ascertaining whether or not any individual or corporation is, without proper authority, occupying, in whole or in part, any such lands. Said commission shall also investigate and report on any and all transfers of title to such lands by the United States, either by authority of Congress or otherwise, and shall make recommendations as to the future policy of the Government with respect to the sale or retention of any and all such lands, title to which may have been or is now vested in the United States, and pending the report of said commission, unless otherwise directed by Congress, all authorizations heretofore made for the sale of Government land in the District of Columbia, in which conveyances have not been made or contracts entered into, shall be held in abeyance. The commission hereby created shall have authority to send for persons, papers, documents, public and private records, administer oaths, and to conduct such investigation in such manner as said commission may deem best, and shall report the results of such investigation to the Sixtieth Congress, together with its recommendations. And for the expense of said commission a sum not to exceed $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended on vouchers approved by the chairman of said commission.

SEC. 27. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of San Juan, P. R., for street and other purposes, such portions of the site in said city reserved for Federal building purposes by Executive order dated June 30, 1903, as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury may not be required for the present or probable future needs of the United States for sites for Federal buildings.

SEC. 28. That hereafter in all cases where appropriations are made in part only for carrying into effect the provisions of legislation authorizing the acquisition of land for sites or for the enlargement of sites for public buildings, or for the erection or remodeling, extension, alteration, and repairs of public buildings, the Secretary of the Treasury, unless otherwise specifically directed, be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to enter into contracts within the full limit of cost fixed by Congress therefor.

SEC. 29. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall require all owners or agents of sites in each city mentioned in this act, where sites or additions to sites are to be purchased, to submit offers of sale in writing. And in case a site or addition to a site acquired under the provisions of this act contains a building or buildings, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to rent until their removal becomes necessary such of said buildings as may be purchased by the Government, or the land on which the same may be located, where the buildings are reserved by the vendors, at a fair rental value, the net proceeds thereof to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and a report of the proceedings to be submitted to Congress annually: Provided, That each site selected under the provisions of this act shall be bounded upon at least two sides by streets, unless otherwise specifically provided.

SEC. 30. That proposals for the sale of land suitable for all sites, or additions to sites, provided for in this act, respectively, shall be invited by public advertisement in one of the newspapers of said cities, respectively, of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals. Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be mailed and addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

SEC. 31. That all buildings authorized to be constructed, enlarged, or extended under the provisions of this act shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys: Provided, That in exceptional cases and for good cause shown the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, reduce the open space to less than 40 feet and to any dimensions which he shall deem sufficient to afford fire protection.

SEC. 32. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

SEC. 33. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules—

Mr. SMALL. I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I made the demand for a second, and I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York demands a second and is opposed to the bill. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLOTT] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLOTT. Mr. Speaker, in presenting what is known as the "omnibus public-building bill" to the House for passage, I desire to state that this comprehensive measure represents the labor of many months and the diligent and conscientious efforts—barring the chairman of course—of every member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Including 56 bills passed by and sent over from the other House, the committee has had under consideration not less than $21 different bills and propositions, calling for a total appropriation of more than $112,000,000. The bill as it is now presented to the House carries only about one-fifth of that amount, namely, in round numbers, $21,000,000, with a little over $2,000,000 additional for continuing contracts. By continuing contracts are meant those cases where the total limits of cost of the authorizations have been fixed and only a small amount authorized for the present, in order to enable the Supervising Architect to begin the construction of the buildings.

It is needless, perhaps, to state that the task of scaling down the enormous demands made upon the committee to the proportions of this bill was not a pleasant one, but the duty had to be performed though the result be disappointment in some quarters, inasmuch as the committee could not in all cases grant what Members desired. In a general way, it can be stated, however, that the most urgent needs of our growing Federal service have been amply provided for.

The wisdom of legislation of this kind, Mr. Speaker, is patent to all. It is necessary, even in times of great prosperity, to house the growing Federal service, but it is especially desirable in periods of temporary depression, when appropriations of this character made by the General Government will have the effect of stimulating business and affording employment to labor.

The new policy adopted by the committee two years ago, namely, that of constructing plain and practical buildings instead of ornamental structures for the postal service, has been strictly adhered to in the present bill. In nearly all the large cities whose claims have been considered by the committee the present Federal buildings will be turned over to the uses of the Government other than those of the post-office, while for the postal service special buildings in close proximity to railroad stations are contemplated. This policy is not only more economical, but will also afford better and more healthful accommodations to the employees, and at the same time facilitate and cheapen the transmission of the mails.

I also desire to call special attention to a new departure which has suggested itself as a better business method of defraying the expenses of the Office of the Supervising Architect. Heretofore the field and office expenses of that service have been deducted from the amounts appropriated for new building projects, and this system has caused considerable dissatisfaction in many cases. In lieu of it the committee now proposes that all of these expenses shall be appropriated for directly upon estimates to be annually submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

And in this connection permit me to suggest that upon the inauguration of this reform steps should be taken at an early day, either by the Secretary of the Treasury or by Congress, to consolidate under one head all the branches of the Treasury Department which have to do with building operations. At the present time this service is divided, and a consolidation is desirable from every consideration of economy and efficient public service.

One other section in the bill should be specially mentioned, namely, section 26, which proposes the creation of a commission to consist of the Secretary of War, the Attorney-General, the president of the Board of District Commissioners, and the respective chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds. This commission is to fully investigate land transfers in the District of Columbia, and is to fix a definite policy with respect to the disposition of Government lands in the District of Columbia, with a view to determining which of these lands shall properly be disposed of or retained. The commission is to report at the next session of Congress.

Upon examination of the bill Members of the House will find—and I believe they will do the committee the justice to say so—that the claims of all sections of the country have been fully and impartially considered without regard to party, individual representation here, or any other consideration except the public good.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to some omissions which I have been advised by several members of the committee have occurred in the bill. They are Xenia and Wooster, Ohio, and Elwood, Ind., for which sites had been contemplated, as I understand it, by the subcommittees. Since it is not possible under this rule to offer amendments to the bill, I will state that if these corrections should be made in the other House there will be no objection to them on the part of the conferees of the House.

In order to answer any questions or objections, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to express my objection to this method of passing an important bill.

This bill contains 454 items and carries $20,000,000 in direct appropriations and over $3,000,000 in authorizations. It is referred to in all of the morning papers of to-day as the "pork barrel." For several weeks the papers of the country have announced that the public-buildings bill was being held up until after a currency bill had been passed through this House, and that as soon as that bill was passed with the necessary votes this bill would be reported. I do not believe all that I see in the papers of the country, Mr. Speaker, and yet it is a somewhat peculiar coincidence that the gentleman from Missouri reported this bill immediately after the vote was taken upon the currency bill yesterday.

This bill contains sixty-two pages. It has been in print about three hours. The gentleman from Missouri asks the House to examine this bill carefully, not of course before it passes, but after it passes, and then to do the committee the justice to say that every section of the country has been fairly and impartially treated, or, as I might more bluntly state it, that the spoils have been evenly distributed to accomplish the purpose desired.

It has been asserted that this bill would be so prepared that if the President of the United States dared to exercise his constitutional power and to veto this bill, so many Members would be personally interested in it that there would be no question that the bill would pass easily, over the veto of the President. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge and no means of ascertaining whether the bill has been framed with that purpose in view. I am quite confident that the present Chief Executive of the United States will never put the Congress to the test by vetoing a public-building bill.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLOMEW] justifies this bill because in a time of depression it is wise for this Government to undertake great public works, so as to employ the unemployed. Does the gentleman from Missouri hope to have employed a sufficient number of the idle men of the country so that when election comes around they will fail to appreciate the condition to which a Republican Administration has brought the country? To-day the Treasury sheet shows that for the present fiscal year there is a deficit in the revenues in comparison with the expenditures of $56,000,000.

This day last year the excess of revenues over expenditures was $61,000,000. The estimates for carrying on the public service for the current year are $118,000,000 in excess of the estimated revenues, and Congress apparently is determined not only to appropriate all of the money asked by the Departments, but to seek out, as is done here, the opportunity to appropriate $20,000,000 additional. If there were no fear, Mr. Speaker, that this bill could stand the scrutiny of Members who desire to scrutinize it, if the items in the bill could stand upon their merits if taken singly by the Members of the House and discussed, why is this bill not brought before the House as the river and harbor bills are brought here, and every item permitted to stand on its merits? Why are these lumped together so that, as it has been well said on other occasions by my colleague, they will go through by the "cohesive power of public plunder?" Is there anything here that can not stand upon its merits?

The gentleman from Missouri has referred to one section of the bill, calling particular attention to it. It creates a commission to investigate transactions conveying the title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia. The action of the Republican Congresses during the past twelve years has been severely scored by a distinguished Republican Senator. He has condemned this Congress and its predecessors for having made indefensible transfers of the public land in this District. The gentleman from Missouri brings in a bill providing a commission to investigate these transfers, and that commission is to consist of the Secretary of War, who was authorized to make them, of the president of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who also recommended them, and of the chairman of the two committees, through whom I assume most of the bills passed, and in addition to that the Attorney-General. Not a single Democrat can find a place on that commission.

I do not impeach the integrity of any of the men who are upon that Commission, but if the conditions here have been sufficiently grave to necessitate an investigation of the prior actions of Congress, it would at least have been an assurance to the public that the investigation would have been impartial if all the members of the Commission were not members of the same political party.

Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to enter my emphatic protest against the passage in this way of a bill carrying $20,000,000, so distributed that it is impossible to obtain any consideration of the bill here. I suppose that when the gentleman from Missouri said that Members would investigate it and ascertain that all sections had been impartially treated, he meant that each Member would examine that part of the bill that affected his district particularly, and then they would say that all sections, at least to some extent, were satisfied with the bill.

I have attempted to glance through the bill hastily. I have understood that the Speaker has been a busy man; pressure has been brought upon him from all parts of the country, from all classes of people, for all classes of legislation, and yet more of this bill is devoted to the item for a new public building in the city of Danville, Ill., than to any other single item in the bill; and it may show the complete harmony of action between the Speaker and the chairman of this committee when it is noted that Danville, Ill., and St. Louis each get the identical amount for a public building in their respective places.

Mr. Speaker, I shall take a minute or two longer. Some time since I stated that it would have been advisable for the Speaker to dismiss Congress and conduct the business here himself. I have since ascertained that that would not be an unprecedented action. I have found it stated in a history of the Territory of Alabama, by Pickett, that—the first territorial legislature was convened on the 19th of January, 1818. James Titus was the only member of the executive council and the senate. He sat alone and decided upon all actions of the lower house, and adjourned to meet again with a show of formality that was quite ludicrous.

Why not have the Speaker act here without the rest of the House, call the House to order, rush down and make a point of no quorum, rush back and go through the formality of counting a quorum, afterwards moving to suspend the rules and pass any particular bill he desired, then come down and take twenty minutes to debate one side of it and twenty minutes to debate the other side—and we all know he could discuss both sides with equal effectiveness—then return to the Speaker's chair and take the vote on the passage of the bill? Why go through the absurd farce of intimating that the Members have anything to do with legislation when not sufficient time has been given even to read intelligently this bill carrying $23,000,000 in 454 items?

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina, who, I understand, is opposed to the bill.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, there are just a few words I wish to say regarding this bill. It seems to be understood that every Member of this House must favor this bill because his district has been recognized by an appropriation, great or small. My district has been favored by the committee by increasing the limit of cost of the public building and site in my home city of Washington, N. C., from $75,000 to $110,000, but they have ignored the claims of Greenville, N. C. I realize the difficulties under which the committee has labored. From the statement of the number of bills which have been referred to that committee and the number of bills which have come from the other House, I realize that in the selection of the most meritorious locations they have had an arduous undertaking. I am not impugning their good motives or patriotic desire to serve the entire country in the preparation of this bill. Yet there are two features which I wish to criticize. It is well known to members of the House that for several weeks this bill has been prepared, passed upon by the full committee, and was ready to be offered to this House at any time.

Yet at about 5 o'clock or 6 o'clock yesterday evening, just before the adjournment, it was reported, and no Member of this House, except the committee, had an opportunity to inspect the bill until it was printed this morning and placed in the document room for distribution about 11 o'clock. I do not understand the reason for this action on the part of the committee. I would like to have some explanation from the chairman. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, it indicates a growing lack of confidence upon the part of committees and upon the part of leaders in this House in the membership of the House. What reason exists that any Member of this House should not have known the contents of this bill? The members, including the chairman, had held it in executive confidence until it was reported. I asked one or two members of the committee, and also the clerk of the committee, as to the contents of the bill and that was the information which I received, and I assume others were treated likewise.

Why is it that during the three weeks since this bill has been completed it was withheld from the House and presented finally with only two or three hours in which to inspect it, and that during the session of the House?

While upon this subject, I recall the great sundry civil appropriation bill. Members were not permitted to see the hearings, and the bill was not reported until the day before it was taken up in this House, although it contains one of the most important budgets presented to Congress during the entire session.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit one other criticism. I have a town in my district which sought the acquisition of a site for the erection of a public building. I refer to the town of Greenville. It has a population of about 7,000. Its people are progressive. A large educational institution will soon be established there. It is the largest bright-tobacco market in the world. These are only a few of its attractive features. I understood that town was not recognized because it did not have $10,000 gross receipts from the post-office, and that no town was included in the bill which had less than $10,000.

If everyone had been treated alike, then there could be no just complaint upon the part of Members. Perhaps the chairman of the committee, perhaps the members of the committee may not know there has been any deviation from their alleged rule; and yet, looking at the list of towns for which sites are provided here, I find several towns which, according to the last report of the Post-Office Department for the year ending March 31, 1907, have less than $10,000 gross receipts. They are Cullman, Ala., Searcy, Ark., Cedartown, Ga., Elberton, Ga., Harrisburg, Ill., Lawrenceburg, Ky., Lafayette, La., Rolla, Mo., Pulaskee, Tenn., Springfield, Tenn., Cuero, Tex., Navasota, Tex., Park City, Utah, Wytheville, Va. Each one of those towns, according to the last available report of the Post-Office Department, have less than $10,000 of gross revenues. Now, this may be an inadvertence on the part of the committee; the committee may have been ignorant of the fact.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield the gentleman half a minute.

Mr. SMALL. I say this may have been done inadvertently on the part of the committee, and yet it must be admitted on the part of the committee that I owed it as a duty to myself and my constituents to point out this inconsistent attitude on the part of the committee. The chairman of the committee can say whether the information I have given is correct or not, and I have the report of the Post-Office Department here on my desk.

I repeat, I do not impugn the motives of or make any charge of unfairness against the committee. It is simply up to the committee to explain.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, two minutes and a half, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY].

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, whatever criticism may be justly made on the pending bill, or the manner of its passage, it is not subject to the criticism of being a partisan bill. I realize, as did our committee, that it is utterly impossible in framing a bill of this magnitude, covering as many items as were pending before the committee, to frame a bill that would put everything in that everybody wanted or that justly ought to go in. In my judgment this is an absolutely fair and equitable bill, so far as it could be made so. There may be mistakes in it, but those mistakes have not been the result of any disposition or desire to treat any section of the country or any individual unfairly.

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] complains of the omission of a very small item in the face of the fact that the State of North Carolina is much more largely represented in this bill than many States larger than the State of North Carolina. There are various reasons that occur why in framing such a bill it is necessary to leave out this item or that item. The fact that a State already has its just proportion of items is one of them.

I only want to say, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion the committee tried to be fair and just to each and every section of the country. I want to say, further, in the moment of time that I have left that in the print of this bill, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, certain items through some error or accident, items that had been agreed upon, do not appear in the print as, for instance, the items for Xenia and Wooster, Ohio, and Elwood, Ind. In the framing of the bill—that is, in compiling the reports of the various subcommittees or in the preparation of copy for the printer, these mistakes have occurred, these omissions have been made. This statement should be made in the hope that these mistakes may be corrected elsewhere. There is no opportunity now for amendment here. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the criticism of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], I want to make this emphatic statement, that in no case has the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds deviated from the rule, which is, that no consideration should be given to a town having less than $10,000 postal receipts. [Applause.] In all cases mentioned by the gentleman there were specific reasons for such deviation. Namely, either the town has a court, though it does not have the necessary postal receipts, or it has a customs service which necessitates the erection of a public building, or it has large internal-revenue receipts, as in the tobacco and whisky districts of the South. But in each case, Mr. Speaker, where the postal receipts were below $10,000 the towns were stricken from the reports of the subcommittee. To show that this is true I refer to a case which appealed to me strongly for many reasons—the case of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], whose town has a little over $8,000 postal receipts, and which had to be cut out on that account.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I can not; I have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman from North Carolina has, as I notice, an increase of the limit of cost for the post-office and court-house at Washington, N. C., of $35,000. He has also introduced a bill for the acquisition of a site at Greenville, N. C. The postal receipts at Greenville for the last fiscal year, however, were only $7,247. [Applause.] Consequently, even if the committee had made an exception because of the distinguished and long services of the gentleman from North Carolina in this House, there would have been no probability of this town growing sufficiently that in two years—that is, by the time the building would have to be erected on the site—it would have the necessary postal receipts, and for that reason, not because the gentleman was discriminated against, that item was left out. In a general way, let me add, Mr. Speaker, that the State of North Carolina has more appropriations in this bill in proportion to its population than any other State in the Union. [Applause.]

Reference has also been made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to the item carried in this bill to increase the limit of cost for the new post-office building at St. Louis, Mo. That building when completed, though St. Louis is rapidly advancing to the million-population rank, will not cost more than $1,000,000. It is to be a model building of its kind; and when the proposition was originally made to the committee, every member agreed it was the most modest request before the committee. Now, as to the State of Missouri: I will merely compare that State with Texas, two States of nearly equal population. Texas receives over $1,000,000 in this bill, and Missouri, including the $275,000 for St. Louis, carries only $700,000. So far as the item for Rolla, Mo., is concerned, to which reference has been made, I want to say to the gentleman that it is well within its rights, because that town has free delivery and is entitled to consideration, although that district is represented by a Democrat. [Applause.] And I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that I greatly regret that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] saw fit to differentiate here in discussing this bill between the two parties, because in our committee we know no such difference, as all the Democratic members will be ready to tell you. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill shows that. I admit there is no partisanship in the bill as reported.

Mr. BARTHOLOTT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to speak in support of this bill because this bill does not need the recommendation of any gentleman upon the floor of this House outside of the recommendations made by the committee which reported the bill. I have confidence in every gentleman upon that committee on both sides of the Chamber. I rise to say to the gentleman and to the Members of this House that when I go back home and meet this question and meet the statement of the gentleman from New York this morning I am going to say to my people, when I address them, that the gentleman from New York has done great injustice to the gentlemen on his side of the Chamber when he undertook to slander every Member of this House by saying that they were open to purchase.

I am not going to defend the Republican side, because, Mr. Speaker, they need no defense—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. JENKINS. But I merely speak in defense—

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has no right, and the gentleman can not attribute such offensive language to me as that which reflects upon the membership of this House when I did not utter it.

Mr. JENKINS. I will just ask to proceed in order, and I will modify it as much as I can.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman must understand that he must not make such statements.

The SPEAKER. What did the Chair understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] to ask?

Mr. JENKINS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed in order, then. I said I was willing to qualify my statement. I was only speaking with reference to the effect, at least, of the language of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I am sorry he was sensitive about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not sensitive. I understand the English language, and I never hesitate to say exactly what I mean, and I will not permit the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], or any other Member of this House, to attribute to me a charge that the Members of this House can be purchased or are subject to purchase.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman has apologized.

Mr. JENKINS. I was speaking with reference to the statement made that this bill had been held up by the powers in this House until after the financial bill had been reported.

Mr. SULZER. Who held it up?

Mr. JENKINS. I considered that as a charge that gentlemen on the floor of this House were open to purchase.

Mr. SULZER. Who held it up?

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman has withdrawn his reflections upon Members of this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not withdraw the statement I made.

The SPEAKER. The incident is closed. The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, the practice has always been to withhold the public-building bill until pretty nearly the close of the session, but I want to ask my friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] how many Democratic Indians we got onto our financial reservation yesterday by reason of the fact that the Democratic party was as well cared for in this bill as the Republican membership here? I think, Mr. Speaker, that when we are discussing these questions in the House we ought not to cast these unjust reflections and have it sent all over the country that men are influenced. I want to be able to say that, after my long years of service in this House, I have never met a gentleman on either side of this Chamber that I thought was open to purchase. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLOTT. Mr. Speaker, since this bill carries a large amount of money, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas, 281, nays 6, answered "present" 4, not voting 96, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules a second is ordered. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Speaker, the bill and the amendment include all bills that have passed the Senate and have been reported to the House, and all the bills reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the House, and brings the Calendar up to date. I know of no reason for any further discussion of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas reserves the remainder of his time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I only desire to ask the gentleman a question. I understand these matters have already been passed upon by us virtually?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wanted the House to understand it. That is all, and I waive the balance of my time.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 190, nays 4, answered "present" 12, not voting 172, as follows:

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama demands a second. Under the rule a second is ordered, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] to twenty minutes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I am fully advised of the jurisdiction of the Pension Committee, I think, and I know its limitations; but I have never seen a series of rules adopted and practiced by any committee to which an exception might not be made under proper conditions and circumstances. I think we have here an instance where an amendment is to be presented that ought to appeal, and I believe will appeal, to the Members upon the floor of this House. I understand that under the rule no amendment can be allowed to the pending bill presented by the chairman of the Pension Committee, but I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to make an amendment. And I sincerely hope that there will be no objection. I will state the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to make an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that I shall have to object.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from New Jersey if he will not withhold his objection until the amendment is stated? Possibly he will not object to it then.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Having been advised of the nature of the amendment, I am compelled, owing to the precedent which it would establish, to insist upon my objection.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Will the gentleman from New Jersey allow a statement of the amendment? There may be circumstances concerning it that he does not know about.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amendment is as follows: Senate bill 6846 provided a pension at the rate of $50 per month to Ellen Bernard Lee, widow of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, late brigadier-general of the United States Army. This provision was stricken out by the Pension Committee of the House, and my amendment is to restore the provision of $50 per month for Mrs. Lee. As I said, I am aware that the Pension Committee has not established a precedent of allowing a pension to the widow of an Indian war soldier or to the widow of a soldier of the Spanish-American war. My amendment, Mr. Speaker, relates, as I have said, to the widow of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee. It is useless for me to recount here to-day in this presence the distinguished services of that famous man. The President of the United States has been remarkably kind, considerate, thoughtful, and generous and appointed the son of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee an aid on his staff, and I am advised and do not hesitate to make the statement that out of the compensation of that young man as an aid to the President of the United States his mother has received her only support. Often in the history of this House in the past few years, and within the time that I have been a Member of it, notable exceptions have been made in matters of this kind. When General Lee died, he was a brigadier-general in the United States Regular Army. He was a general in the Spanish-American war.

Mr. KEIFER. A major-general.

Mr. RICHARDSON. A major-general, as my friend from Ohio suggests. I think this House can with good and sufficient reasons imitate the generosity and delicate consideration which has been displayed by the President of the United States to the worthy son of this worthy woman. The President has sent young Lee to Paris to occupy a position in an important school. By reason of this goodness and kindness of the President, Mrs. Lee is practically cut off from the small support that she had through the compensation of her son as aid to the President.

I say that under these circumstances we ought to make an exception. I do not hesitate to say in the presence of this House that the circumstances connected with this case appeal most powerfully to my heart. General Fitzhugh Lee was wounded while fighting the Indians. He was the consul of our Government at Habana, Cuba, and rendered our country distinguished diplomatic services in the troublesome times preceding our war with Spain. He was a major-general in our war with Spain, and did his full duty. He lived, fought, and died a poor man, and his widow is entitled to the small compensation asked for by my amendment.

I do not believe that a rigid, unbending iron rule, one that contravenes the suggestion or impulses of generosity and kindness, ought to be followed in a case like this, and I submit it,

Mr. Speaker, fairly to this House. I will not undertake, because it might be improper and it might be misconstrued, if I undertook to give instances where precedents of liberality, generosity, and kindness have been established by this House, regardless of fixed rules. We are only asking for this good woman a pension of $50 a month, and I trust and hope that the bill will find a responsive sympathy in the hearts of the Members of this House.

I yield now, Mr. Speaker, such time as my friend from Virginia [Mr. JONES] may wish.

Mr. GOULDEN. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to ask him a question. Does this lady now receive any pension?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am informed that she receives none at all.

Mr. GOULDEN. I think she is entitled to it.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be informed as to the parliamentary situation. I understand the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER], chairman of the Committee on Pensions, moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has just been read to the House, and, if I am not mistaken, he stated there were certain amendments. I wish to ask if those amendments have been actually read to the House and if they are all included in the omnibus bill which was read at the desk?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. All the amendments were read at the desk.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Are there any amendments other than those read which it is the gentleman's purpose to offer?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The motion was to take from the Speaker's table the House bill 1991, agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment, which I sent to the Clerk's desk and which was read. They have all been read to the House.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising was to say a word or two in favor of a provision which the Committee on Pensions has stricken out of one of the Senate bills which has been offered as an amendment to the House bill now under consideration. The Senate bill provided, among others, for a pension of $50 a month for Mrs. Ellen Bernard Lee, widow of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee. The Committee on Pensions in this House, to whom that bill was referred, has seen fit to strike out the provision giving Mrs. Lee a pension; and since the Chair holds that, under the extraordinary rules under which this body is now operating, no motion to restore that provision can be entertained, I fear there is nothing to be accomplished by a discussion of the subject. That, Mr. Speaker, is one of the unfortunate results of the adoption of this rule, and nothing could more strongly illustrate the injustice of which so drastic a rule is capable of working.

Mr. AMES. The result of the filibuster.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Not, as the gentleman from Massachusetts suggests, the result of the filibuster, but the result of the rule, because, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman surely does not want to admit, I think, that the minority can force the majority to do anything which it does not desire to do. I am not willing to believe that the gentleman wishes to give the country that impression. That is even more than the minority has yet claimed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is, or can possibly be, a single provision in this omnibus bill, with all of its omnibus amendments, more meritorious, or one which would appeal with greater force to this House, than the one which the Committee on Pensions has deliberately stricken out, and which the House is powerless, even if everyone of its Members desired it, to have reinserted.

From what I know of the sentiment of this House I do not hesitate to say that I believe it would vote almost unanimously in favor of giving this small pension to the widow of Fitzhugh Lee; in fact, I do not know of a single Member of the House, unless it be the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, the gentleman from New Jersey, who would vote against so meritorious a proposition.

Lest some gentleman, aware of the distinguished part which General Lee bore in the war between the States, may suppose that the career of this superb soldier was confined to that war, I wish to declare that such was very far from being the case.

General Lee was an officer in the United States Army before the beginning of the war between the States. He performed very gallant and most distinguished services in the wars with the Indians. In the performance of these services he was wounded in both lungs by an arrow, very seriously and dangerously wounded, a fact probably not known to all the Members of this House. In addition to this, we all know that when the war with Spain was declared he was consul-general at Habana, and that he performed very valuable services in that capacity.

services so highly regarded by his countrymen that when he returned to this country after the destruction of the Maine he was given here, in the city of Washington, one of the largest and most enthusiastic receptions ever given to any military hero within my recollection.

He was appointed by President McKinley a major-general in the Army, and he was in charge of the American troops in Cuba during the troublous times that succeeded the war, during what may be called the "period of pacification." Now, Mr. Speaker, General Lee died as he lived, a poor man. He had never cared anything about the accumulation of money, and I happen to know that he had not drawn the salary due him as president of the Jamestown Exposition for the two years just previous to his untimely death, and I am told that his widow may never receive a cent of that money. She was left absolutely penniless, and she has long been and now is dependent upon her son, Capt. Fitzhugh Lee, who is known to a good many gentlemen of this House as one of the aids, until recently, of President Roosevelt.

It seems to me that this is a case which ought to appeal to every Member on both sides of this Chamber, and it is one which I think, Mr. Speaker, does so appeal. I believe that if the opportunity were given, if the gentleman from New Jersey would not object to a request for unanimous consent to offer an amendment restoring the Senate provision granting to Mrs. Lee the very modest pension of $50 a month, such an amendment would be received with unanimous approval. I am going to again ask, Mr. Speaker, that unanimous consent be given me to offer as an amendment the provision inserted in this bill by the Senate, to give Mrs. Ellen Bernard Lee a pension of $50 a month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to offer as an amendment the provision placed in the bill by the Senate to give Mrs. Lee a pension of $50 a month. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the thousands of widows of privates all over the country who have the same kind of claim upon the bounty of the Government as this one does, who have no one here to ask unanimous consent for them, I must still continue my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey objects.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that the gentleman feels constrained to object to this request. I have no doubt that there are a great many other widows in the country who need and probably deserve pensions. Because they can not all get them seems to me not to be a very good reason for objecting to the granting of pensions to those whose claims actually come before Congress. If this rule had been pursued all during the years that have passed since the close of the civil war, there are a great many widows who to-day are enjoying pensions five, yes, ten, times as large as that which is asked for Mrs. Lee, who would not now be enjoying them.

I have no doubt that there are a great many widows of the civil war just as deserving as many of those who already receive very large pensions who to-day are receiving a pittance of $8 or $12 a month. If the rule which the gentleman from New Jersey would now enforce against the widow of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee had been invoked against some of the widows of high officers who are now drawing very large pensions, they would never have received them, as the gentleman very well knows.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to consume any of the time of the House other than to say that I have no objection to this Government granting an annuity to the widow of General Lee, but I do have great objection to its being granted in the way of a pension, thus establishing a precedent that if followed out would cost this country two or three hundred millions of dollars a year. I do not believe that on either side of this House there is a single Member who, if he gives this thought and study, will be in favor of it. I ask for a vote on the motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon suspending the rules and concurring in the Senate amendments with an amendment.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays. As many as favor ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] A sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven gentlemen present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees, and the question will be taken on the motion to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments with an amendment. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 177, nays 7, answered "present" 17, not voting 187, as follows:

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio with Mr. ANSBERRY.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. DRAPER with Mr. SPIGHT.

For the session:

Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

AMENDING LAW IN RELATION TO COLLECTION OF THE REVENUES.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, to disagree to the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 17506, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference on the following bill, which the Clerk will report with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 17506, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues,' approved June 10, 1890, as amended by an act entitled 'An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States,' approved June 24, 1897."

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second just for the purpose of stating I think the bill ought to go to conference.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the second is ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to suspend the rules, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-three gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members; as many as favor agreeing to the motion will, as their names are called, answer "aye;" as many as are opposed will answer "no;" those present and not voting will answer "present;" and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 183, answered "present" 16, not voting 189, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey with Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri.

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GRANGER.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. JONES of Virginia.

Mr. FAIRCHILD with Mr. RUSSELL of Texas.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. RAUCH.

Mr. GREENE with Mr. RANDELL of Texas.

Mr. KNOPF with Mr. CALDWELL.

The doors were opened.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. PAYNE, Mr. DALZELL, and Mr. UNDERWOOD.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 21871) to amend the national banking laws, with an amendment, and asked for a conference on the bill and amendment, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DANIEL, and Mr. TELLER.

RAILROAD SIDING AT NAVY-YARD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 20120, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20120) to authorize the construction of a railroad siding to the United States navy-yard, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman if this is not a bill from the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; it is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That being a bill from the District of Columbia Committee, then, in pursuance of a statement previously made by me upon the floor, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair announces the following conferees: Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. FOSTER of Indiana, and Mr. MURPHY.

NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 21871, disagree to the Senate amendments, and assent to the request for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] moves to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 21871), of which the Clerk will read the title, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to a conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I notice that the Chair announces that the Clerk will read merely the title.

The SPEAKER. For the present the title.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not necessary that the amendments themselves be read, so that the House will know the subject-matter to be considered?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21871) to amend the national banking laws.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I should like to submit a parliamentary inquiry to the Speaker: If this motion to suspend the rules and take this bill from the Speaker's desk, with the Senate amendments, and disagree to the same and assent to the conference asked for by the Senate, is voted down, then the parliamentary inquiry which I desire to make is, Whether or not the bill would not then necessarily go back to the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide the various actions under the rules upon bills when questions are presented. The Chair would have to make a critical examination of the bill. It is as much as the Chair can do to decide intelligently questions as they arise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the question of the Chair in good faith.

The SPEAKER. The Chair answers the gentleman from Mississippi in good faith.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Chair's answer to be rather a confession of inability to answer the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not given the bill that close attention as to the point referred to that the Chair ought to give it if the point ever arises. That is all the Chair aims to say.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point that I make, Mr. Speaker, will not arise except in the minds of Members, to determine their votes. There is no point of order that can be made—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, is this a part of the debate? If not, I insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the Vreeland bill, which passed the House yesterday, is thoroughly understood. The Senate has taken prompt action upon this measure, and sends here to us in the form of an amendment to the Vreeland bill the bill known as the "Aldrich bill." [Applause.] So that the House clearly understands the situation. This almost immediate action by the Senate gives promise that we can accomplish something at this session, and I trust the motion may promptly prevail. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, upon yesterday, I believe it was— [Great laughter.]

Mr. CUSHMAN. You were present. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. You have run this thing so rapidly I hardly know whether it was yesterday or not. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] has indicated his ignorance of the manner in which the House has been carrying on its affairs. I said "on yesterday, I believe," because I thought the House might perhaps understand either that I was referring to the days of the week or of the legislative day. If the former, it was yesterday; if the latter, it was to-day.

In the parting remarks I made on that day I said: "Of course, Mr. Speaker, you understand, and I understand, and everybody here understands that there is no intention of passing this miserable, foolish makeshift of a Vreeland bill, but the sole intent is to get something—anything—out of the House, so as to get to a conference with the Senate, whereby the Senate can send back a bill that the predatory wealth of the country really desires to be passed."

Now, the gentleman from Ohio has just confessed that the sum and substance of his motion is to pass the Aldrich bill. But yesterday you were holding up the Vreeland bill as a great thing. Now, Mr. Speaker, if this motion passes what do you do? You have taken the Aldrich bill, if the motion prevails, less the La Follette amendment, which fixed a penalty upon dishonest management by directors and officers of banks; less the Johnston amendment, which fixed a certain percentage of reserves to be held in the vaults of the banks to prevent a recurrence of a depositors' panic. You have not adopted the Vreeland bill in anything except the commission feature, and even there you extend the junketing powers of the commission, because the Vreeland bill contained a limit upon the amount of money that the junketing commission could spend in traveling around over the world, whereas the bill as it comes back from the Senate contains no limitation at all, but says:

A sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of sections 11 and 12—leaving the commission to expend any amount it chooses in financial knight-errantry.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this motion passes this matter will go to conference. If this motion to suspend the rules and do what the gentleman from Ohio proposes to do does not pass the House, then this bill will go back to the Committee on Banking and Currency under the rules of the House. I therefore express the hope that every man on this side of the Chamber, and every man on that side of the Chamber who desires wise and honest banking laws, will vote in opposition to the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. Speaker, I picked up the Washington Post this morning, and I found a little squib in it entitled: "A record made by the Printing Office." I find that upon yesterday, according to the Calendar, to-day, according to the Journal, the so-called "Vreeland bill" got to the Public Printer's Office at 11.30 o'clock; that it was set up in type, proofed and corrected, printed, and sent back here at 12.30 o'clock. The Committee on Banking and Currency was discharged from its consideration before a printed copy got to the committee.

Now, I find the Senate substituting the Aldrich bill as their provision for that which the House passed, and doing it so very quickly that it is sent back here on the same legislative day, and on the next calendar day after the consideration by the House. This is a very important public bill; and I find the Speaker, who finds it so difficult to recognize Members of Congress for useful, remedial legislation demanded by the country, recognizing the gentleman from Ohio to send the matter to conference at once. What is your object, except it be to get this miserable performance over and through with before the country can know what you are doing, before it can be awakened to the gravity of it, and by pressure from the country and from its business interests, and from its financial interests, can prevent you from perpetrating this great fraud? Why, Mr. Speaker, do you know what your performance on that side of the Chamber in regard to this financial legislation reminds me of?

It reminds me of a story of my friend from Arizona, MARK SMITH, told me some days back, of a scene when law and order were not so well preserved in Arizona as they are now. When Mark was riding along a serried and gullied road on horseback, he found a man hanging about as high as Haman and about as dead as Hector, and almost as dead as this so-called "Vreeland legislation" and the Kahn vaudeville performance which accompanied it ought to be.

Upon that man's back was a placard, and the placard contained these words:

This man during his life was a very bad man in some respects, and a damned sight worse one in others.

[Laughter].

There comes back from the Senate an absolutely worse bill than you sent there. Nobody would have imagined it possible, but you have done it. This measure is worse even than the Aldrich bill, because it strikes out of the Aldrich bill the feature to provide a penalty against dishonesty—the La Follette amendment, which was a good feature in it. It strikes out of the Aldrich bill the Johnston amendment to force the banks to keep a certain percentage of their reserves in their own vaults, which was a good feature in the Aldrich bill; so the Senate has sent back a worse bill than the Aldrich bill as it passed the Senate, and you have received back a worse bill than the Vreeland bill as it passed the House, although nobody but Omniscience itself could have looked to either possibility. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] unless the other side will consume some of their time. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio, is he going to conclude in one speech?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Probably so. I can not tell with certainty. No one has asked me, up to date, for any time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FOWLER. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] used this language:

Mr. Speaker, I want to use half a minute in reply to the telegram the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has put in the RECORD from several small banks up in some of the interior counties of Pennsylvania. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no "round robins" worked in order to bring any support or resolutions in behalf of this bill. No banker has been asked to support this bill; no association of manufacturers has been asked to pass resolutions for this bill. I charge that for weeks past systematic efforts have been made by gentlemen opposed to this bill. I charge that a letter has been sent out to 6,500 banks in the United States upon the paper of the Banking and Currency Committee, signed by the chairman of that committee, urging banks to telegraph and write to Members of Congress against a great danger, the nature of which they must judge for themselves. They were told in that letter that a billion and a half of bank debts were about to be assumed by the United States unless they should prevent action by telegraphing to their Members. No "round robins" have been used on this bill, and yet more than fifty great bankers have sent letters and telegrams to this city favoring the passage of this bill.

I have received this letter from a prominent banker in the United States:

MAY 4, 1908.

Hon. CHARLES N. FOWLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed may interest you, particularly the last clause, which is not in accordance with my understanding of what transpired. Yours, truly,

It contained this letter:

Am sending you a copy of currency bill introduced yesterday. Contains nothing but provisions for the organization of clearing-house associations and provisions for a currency commission. My judgment is, in looking over the ground and talking with the Finance Committee of the Senate, that we shall get about the legislation that is in this bill during the present session or we shall get nothing. If merely a commission is sent to the Senate, I am confident they will attach the Aldrich bill and send it back. That would mean that no legislation of any kind, even a commission, would go into the law. I think we recognize by appointing a commission that there is need of further investigation into the currency systems.

In my judgment the passage of this bill will do considerable to give the feeling of confidence to the country. While it will come into use only in case of pressure, yet the fact that large amounts of bank notes are to be kept on hand would be of assistance to national banks all the time by enabling them to have their orders for notes immediately filled. At present it often happens that in the fall, when additional currency is needed and large banks would like to take out additional circulation, they find that it will take five or six weeks to get the circulation delivered, and by that time the need for it is over, so that the bill, in that respect, will be of continuous benefit—

No round robins, gentlemen! This follows:

Could you not see your way clear, therefore, to write to Members of Congress in favor of passing this bill; also to have your correspondents send in letters to the same effect? You will notice that the bill as introduced follows very closely the suggestions made by Western bankers when they were here to oppose the Aldrich bill.

Yours, truly,

EDWARD B. VREELAND.

[Laughter.]

Standing here, in his proper place, the gentleman from New York used this language on page 6542 of the RECORD:

Mr. VREELAND. I have not brought up the forty or fifty letters which I have, but I have one in my pocket that came in this morning by mere chance—

They all came by chance, you see!

It is from the president—

Now, mark this—

It is from the president of the First National Bank of Atlanta, Ga., with a capital of $1,000,000, the largest bank in the State of Georgia, its president a member of the American Bankers' Association from the State of Georgia. Mr. McCord writes me that he has prepared and will mail to-day letters to every Member of Congress from the State of Georgia urging them to vote for this bill.

I call your attention to these facts: There is no First National Bank in Atlanta, Ga. There is no bank in Atlanta, Ga., with a capital of $1,000,000. [Laughter.] Mr. McCord, whom I know intimately, is vice-president of the Third National Bank, which has a capital of $500,000.

Now, I am going to read the letter that I addressed to the people, but before proceeding with this letter I challenge the gentleman from New York, the new knight of finance and currency from the hopyards and the hayfields of Cattaraugus County, to file in the RECORD to-morrow those forty letters. I challenge him to do it. Let the public read them. This is my letter. I will not only content myself with having sent it to 6,500 bankers, but I will submit it to the considerate judgment—the free and unbiased opinion—of 85,000,000 of people by putting it in the RECORD. [Applause.] I will stand by it, and, mark my words, it has in it the substance of prophecy.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1908.

MY DEAR SIR: It is a matter of vital importance that, if any financial or currency legislation is to be passed this session, it should be right and wise, and should not complicate still more inextricably our already unfortunate condition.

To adopt an associate-bank scheme (the Vreeland bill) which is novel and has never been tried anywhere in the world, under the pretense that it is a clearing-house plan, because clearing houses were used during the panic, will prove a most disastrous venture for many reasons. Not one bank in ten in the United States would become a beneficiary. It therefore gives no common advantage to small and large banks alike.

The guaranty of bank debts by the United States Government has no parallel in history; and, since the Government has no liquid assets with which to meet them, it will imperil the national credit, especially when the reserve fund is already overburdened—

They came to realize that fact the night before they introduced the last edition of this bill.

It has been proposed in the Vreeland bill to have the United States Government indorse and guarantee one billion five hundred million of bank notes.

We may pass Mr. VREELAND's associate-bank bill in an hour under the whip and spur of power, although we are dealing with the most delicate and important subject in the world, and it may remain to curse us for a half century, since the normal increase of money and currency is very great in a new and growing country like ours, having been about $150,000,000 a year for the last ten years. Unless provision is made for this normal increase we will carry the burden of the proposed taxes on this emergency currency ranging from 4 to 10 per cent in the form of increased rates of interest, ranging from 1 to 3 per cent. This increased burden upon commerce will help no one, not even the banks, because the profits of a bank are superimposed upon the cost of production whatever the level of that cost may be.

This bill will rob the farmer, the manufacturer, the merchant, and in the end will be borne by labor, and will be the means, in many instances, of shutting us out from the markets of the world.

It is both your duty and your interest to enter your protest against the passage of the Vreeland bill; and you should at once telegraph your Member of Congress and Senator in opposition to this monstrous and dangerous proposition—

I say that now—

It has been born of a necessity, and is an economic deformity, and will prove only another addition to the mistakes and blunders of the last forty years, which have left us only a crazy quilt, and made our financial and currency practices the laughingstock of the rest of the world.

The highest wisdom would require us to wait until intelligence and reason asserted themselves, but if we must do something, that something should at least be right, however small or great it be.

If, after reading the inclosed bill, you believe that its adoption would be a step in the right direction and would conserve the public welfare until the whole matter could be considered and passed upon by a broad commission, representing all the various interests of the United States, you should telegraph and write your Representative immediately, expressing your views in favor of it.

CHARLES N. FOWLER.

[During the reading of the letter the time of Mr. FOWLER expired and Mr. WILLIAMS yielded him two minutes more.]

Mr. FOWLER. I submit the following for the sober consideration of this House if they hope to act wisely and secure the approval of the final judgment of the American people:

MAY 13, 1908.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following quotation is a copy of a message sent you to-day by me:

"Vreeland bill panic breeder. Better nothing. Fowler bill good." The Vreeland bill is a panic breeder because it puts no check whatever on the amount that may be issued of bond-secured currency, and as long as we have such a currency that does not return frequently for redemption, just so long will the trust companies and the State banks count it as a reserve, and consequently as real money in their institutions, and expand credits until panic is produced as in the recent past. Instead of Congress endeavoring to legislate, at least toward a better system, it seems from bills recently presented it is working for more patchwork and chaos.

If the United States Government had to issue bonds for any purpose whatever to-day, the national banks of the country would buy them and issue currency thereon regardless of whether needed or not, and thereby encourage the overexpansion mentioned above. Furthermore, if this temporary Vreeland bill becomes a law, it will have a tendency to prevent Congress taking up, after election, scientific legislation.

A large banking system is very much needed, but this is a political impossibility. Mr. FOWLER, however, by grouping our banks in his bill, has added features that will bring the banks closer together for scientific education and for warding off overexpansion and thereby preventing a panic, as does a large banking system. This is undoubtedly as near a large banking system as can be obtained, and at the same time it retains intact our small banks the country over that the people are so attached to.

The bill furthermore provides for the retirement of all bond-secured currency, and for a currency system that is flexible and one that is acknowledged as correct by the world's best students.

We are now having the usual stagnation in money matters that follows overexpansion of credits, and this fall we will have the Presidential election on hand, and therefore there is no probability of overexpansion and panic until a settled policy is assured; and therefore no extreme needs for currency legislation, it seems, is now demanded, certainly none that is not well founded on that truth that is recognized the world over.

It does seem that America has had enough of hasty makeshift legislation to make Congress take time, if necessary, and lay foundations on broad, deep, and lasting principles.

I have been in the banking business in this city for twenty-seven years and until recently. I went through the hard times of 1893-1896. Since then have been a close student, and for these reasons I presume to address you as I have. Please excuse me if I show a little of the ego between the lines.

With proper banking and currency laws our last panic would have been less severe, and furthermore, we would have been able to have cushioned down easier, and thereby this terrible stagnation in business which we now have, with men out of employment everywhere, would not have been nearly so great.

I beg of you to lend your influence for no more makeshifts or temporary legislation, and for the best or nothing for America. The Fowler bill is certainly worthy of the most careful consideration. It seems to me that it is as near the truth as could be gotten up.

With hopes for the best legislation in the end, and for your, and now my, party, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

J. G. VINTON.

NEW YORK, May 14, 1908.

HON. CHARLES N. FOWLER,
Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency,
Washington, D. C.

The Merchants' Association of New York protests against the ill-considered and hasty proposition embodied in the latest phase of Vreeland currency bill, as near as they are able to follow the rapid changes which this bill is undergoing. We believe the vast majority of mercantile bodies would join us in this protest if they had time to find out what is going on.

We urge no legislation except creation of commission.
THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
HENRY B. TOWNE, President,
EDWARD D. PAGE, Chairman,
Committee on Commercial Law.

TRADES LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Philadelphia, Pa., May 11, 1908.

HON. CHARLES N. FOWLER,
Chairman Banking and Currency Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a special meeting of the board of directors of the Trades League this afternoon the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the cause of currency reform has been strengthened by the action of the recent Republican conference in declaring, by an overwhelming vote, its confidence in commercial paper as a safe and logical asset for emergency currency, and also by approving the appointment of a commission to investigate financial conditions and to frame a permanent financial measure; but

"Whereas serious embarrassment and loss to the National Government and grave disturbance to financial and commercial interests are likely to follow the adoption of a credit or asset currency measure, unless the construction of said measure is complete and scientific, and such as would insure the automatic expansion and contraction of the volume of currency in response to the normal demands of trade, and would insure the redemption of said currency in gold or its equivalent without threatening the integrity of the gold reserve in the National Treasury;

Resolved, That in view of the conflicting opinions expressed by different Members of Congress and the improbability of the subject receiving the exhaustive and dispassionate consideration which its importance warrants, together with the absence of currency-panic apprehension for this year, the Trades League of Philadelphia believes that constructive currency legislation could be wisely deferred until such a measure is duly framed by a competent commission; but if it be deemed essential to enact some form of constructive currency legislation at this time, the Trades League earnestly advocates the adoption of the Fowler credit currency bill, introduced into the House May 9, 1908, because, under said bill, the currency would be secured by the assets of the banks, protected by the same reserve of lawful money which is now required against deposits, guaranteed by a general guaranty fund, and, by reason of its prompt redemption, be automatically retired when not needed by the normal demands of trade, and the redemption of which currency would be independent of the gold reserve in the National Treasury.

Resolved, That the Trades League of Philadelphia further earnestly urges the enactment of the Fowler currency commission bill, for the reason that while said bill provides for representatives of all legitimate interests, thereby logically commanding the confidence of all classes and all sections of the country, the large majority of Congressional Representatives and financial experts upon said commission would justify expectation of the framing of a scientific, comprehensive, and practical measure which would duly safeguard all legitimate interests and insure the greatest security and uniformity to the financial and commercial interests of the nation.

Yours, truly,
[REAL.]

N. B. KELLY, Secretary.

[From the New York Tribune, May 13, 1908.]

THE CURRENCY BILL.

Without the text of the new Vreeland currency bill at hand it is impossible to discuss its provisions with full confidence, but from the summary of the amendments given out the bill is apparently greatly improved. In effect it provides for the issue in an emergency of the familiar clearing-house certificates in the form of bank notes. The amendments agreed upon have safeguarded the formation of the proposed clearing-house associations in important particulars. They must be made up of banks in a contiguous territory. Not more than one can be formed in a single city, and no bank can belong to more than one clearing house. The main effect of these changes will be to make it impossible for a "chain of banks" under a single ownership to form a clearing house for the purpose of taking out circulation.

One important amendment which the Tribune advocated we are glad to see embodied in the bill—namely, the requirement that the banks maintain a reserve against their notes. Apparently—for the summary is not specific on this point—the reserve required against the notes is the same as the reserve required against deposits, and this is as it should be. A bank's note is a promise to pay on demand just exactly as a depositor's pass book is, except that one is current and the other is personal. They are demand liabilities on exactly the same footing, and sound banking requires a reserve against each. This principle has been wisely recognized.

A defect in the bill, which ought to be corrected when it comes up for passage either in the House or the Senate, is the failure to provide redemption facilities. Why this has not been done is not clear, inasmuch as the clearing houses to be created under the bill could naturally and properly serve as the redemption agencies. Circumstances might easily arise under which the burden upon the Treasury of redeeming a $500,000,000 issue of bank notes would be full of embarrassment and possibly of danger. If the Treasury were ever again in as weak a condition as it was in after the panic of 1893 the redeeming of a $500,000,000 issue forced in by a high tax in a period when interest rates were falling rapidly might be fraught with peril, and the emergency issue, instead of warding off a panic, might magnify it. These proposed notes are bank notes, and it is the proper function of the banks, not of the Government, to redeem bank notes.

MR. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the other side?

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has nineteen minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi two minutes.

MR. WILLIAMS. As the other side have nineteen minutes and I have only two minutes, I suggest that the other side use some of their time.

MR. BURTON of Ohio. Of course I desire to close the debate; no gentleman upon this side has asked for time, and I think the gentleman from Mississippi had better take the two minutes, and I will close. I do not intend to occupy all of my time.

MR. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in that two minutes I want to say that the special rule which was passed by the House of Representatives—because, the Speaker having evaded it, I will have to answer my own parliamentary inquiry—says:

That immediately upon the adoption of this rule, and at any time thereafter during the remainder of this session, it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table any general appropriation bill returned with Senate amendments; and such amendments having been read, the question shall be at once taken, without debate or intervening motion on the following question: "Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?" and if this motion shall be decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall at once appoint the conferees, without the intervention of any motion. If the House shall decide said motion in the negative, the effect of said vote shall be to agree to the said amendments.

So that the special rule applies only to "general appropriation bills." Moreover, this question was not submitted by the Speaker in the language of the rule—the language placed in quotation marks in the special rule. This is not a general appropriation bill. This is a bill, however, that "makes a charge on the Treasury," and therefore comes under Rule XX, which says:

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Rule XIII, in reference to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, says:

First. A Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to which shall be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character, directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

That indicates the Calendar upon which this sort of legislation goes. Now, I direct the attention of the Chair to page 335 of the Manual and Digest, under the heading of "Amendments between the Houses," which says:

The point being made and sustained that a Senate amendment to a House bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole, the bill is referred directly from the Speaker's table to the standing committee having jurisdiction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have read this in order that the gentlemen of the House might understand that although I can not make a point of order, because the motion to suspend the rules, under a recent ruling of the Chair, suspends all rules, still I want the House to understand what the effect would be if we vote "no" and successfully defeat the motion. It is only when a motion to suspend is sustained by the House that, as pretended, "all rules are suspended." Then the Speaker's duty will be, if we beat the motion to suspend, to send this bill, which has come back from the Senate, to the Committee on Banking and Currency, being the standing committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I take it to be unnecessary to discuss the parliamentary point made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Under the rule adopted April 20, it is possible to suspend the rules upon a conference report. I must say that this discussion of yesterday and to-day—

Mr. WILLIAMS. But this is not a conference report.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It is action upon a conference report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There has been no conference report.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Well, it is a request for a conference, and it comes under the rule, at any rate. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this discussion both of yesterday and to-day has assumed a very singular phase. This is a financial question, which we should discuss dispassionately, but the air has been filled with accusations that this measure is prompted by predatory wealth and by fraud.

Gentlemen, can you not stand up and argue this bill on its merits? Are you in a position to complain of our efforts to accomplish something for the interest of the whole country? You brought in a bill which had most distinguished approval, that of your candidate for the Presidency, that of your leader, also the unanimous approval of the Democratic minority of the Committee on Banking and Currency. You presented it and with a blare of trumpets went to the country and told of the great benefits which would come from the bill which you proposed. No predatory wealth was behind your measure; only benevolent, philanthropic motives. But when it came to the day of discussion, never was there an army which so defiantly marched up to the top of the hill and then skeddaddled down again. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit an interruption?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I would ask the gentleman these two questions: First, whether or not that bill was not designated by its number without any permission to us to make the slightest amendment in it [laughter on the Republican side]—oh, wait. Second, whether or not the gentleman from Ohio did not know—I know that other gentlemen did know it, whether the gentleman from Ohio knew it or not—that there was a clerical mistake in section 7 of that bill which we wanted to correct? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. First, I suppose it was designated by number. It was a bill that you had until the month of March to perfect, and later there was ample time for you to perfect it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. It had been perfected with the exception of a clerical error, and you would not let us correct that.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I want to say to the gentleman that if he had risen before this House and said, "I stand for the substance of that bill, but there is a clerical error in it which I desire to correct," I do not believe there is a Member of this House who would have uttered a syllable of protest against that correction being made. [Applause and cheers on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Protest! Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent now. I ask that consent now.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I must decline to yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the gentleman issued a challenge, and I have accepted that challenge.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, let not the gentleman deceive himself. This bill was under discussion for hours. If he was in love with his bill and it had a trivial blemish, why did he not rise up and point out that blemish and ask to have it removed? He did nothing, because he says there was a "clerical error!" [Laughter on the Republican side.] The Congress must wait. The country must wait. We must have no financial legislation, because, forsooth, somebody's private secretary made a "clerical error!"

Mr. WILLIAMS. Which clerical error defeated the purposes of the bill.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, I can not yield any more. Mr. Speaker, there have been instances in the history of the world before when the specious attempt was made to throw the blame for inaction or misdeeds upon the private secretary. [Laughter.] It is far better for the gentleman to stand up and take the responsibility himself. Why, one would think to listen to his remarks that we were moving to concur in the Aldrich bill.

We are moving to disagree. We are moving to sustain the bill passed by the House yesterday, and I want to say that as one Member of this House I shall stand by the substantial provisions of the bill as it passed the House yesterday. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Aldrich bill has been much abused [laughter on the Democratic side]; it is not so bad a measure as it is claimed to be; but, in my judgment, it points in the wrong direction, and if it passes this House, it will be without my vote and without my support. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] speaks of an amendment being left out. Just let us consider a minute the difference between destruction, between standing in opposition, and constructive legislation. The gentleman from Mississippi and many of his party, lo, these many months and many years, have been standing in the way of legislation, and they have lost the gift which otherwise would belong to them of constructing something. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

They know how to oppose; they do not know how to create. When the time comes for discussion I want them to say whether they favor that section of the Aldrich bill which would make it impossible in the smaller communities of the country to operate a bank at all, because it provides that no bank shall discount the notes of a corporation in case they have any directors in common. Such a provision would absolutely prevent the organization of banks, or, at any rate, do away with the benefits conferred by them, in these minor communities. Do we wish to fasten any such hampering, absurd section as that upon any bill? With that part which would prevent the buying of bonds or stocks of a corporation by a bank having trustees who are also trustees in that corporation I could agree, but I would not agree to the extreme and absurd provision which I have mentioned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just a brief question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes remaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman aware that that provision which was referred to as the La Follette amendment is not in this Senate amendment as it comes here in this bill?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If it is left out, it is because a step has been taken in the right direction in the Senate. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is possible, too, it may be a "clerical error." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Would the gentleman say it was a step in the right direction when the Senate struck out the provision giving the President the right to appoint six members of the commission and giving that right to the Speaker and the Vice-President?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is for discussion—

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Is the gentleman for that particular recommendation?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would stand by the action of the House, in the first instance, whether I believed in it or not. Six in the Senate, six here, and six outside, but I do not regard that question as of such vital importance that it should be allowed to prevent financial legislation. I say that right here and now. [Applause on the Republican side.] We should not stop investigating or shrink from investigating banking and currency questions on the comparatively unimportant problem of how eighteen men shall be selected.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I just wanted to know—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But in answering your question I am now anticipating something that is not before the House—

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I want to know—

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the gentleman from Kentucky should address the Speaker—

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to know of the gentleman if he maintains the same distrust of the President that has been exhibited by the Senate on this question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. By no means have I any distrust of the President. I have the greatest confidence in him. Nor do I think the action indicates any distrust on the part of the Senate. There is room for argument on both sides. They made that change, probably, thinking that it was the duty of legislators to solve legislative questions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER]. He referred to the letter written by Mr. VREELAND. Unfortunately Mr. VREELAND is not here, but certainly he was within his rights and in the performance of his duty if he sent out a letter in regard to this legislation. If he was unwilling to do anything of that kind, why—

Mr. BURLESON. He denied it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not question his right to send that letter, but he was so cruel as to charge me with having sent out a letter with the Committee of Banking and Currency heading upon it and signed by the chairman. His letter was upon official paper, but as I received it I believe the committee heading had been clipped off; but the point that I make is he was chiding me for doing a thing which he denied having done himself, although he had done it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. There is something just a little artificial in this applause. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] ignores the distinction between a propaganda that has been carried on by him for months, the difference between his sending out more than 6,000 letters, on the letter heads of the Banking and Currency Committee, and the sending out by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND], so far as it is brought to the attention of the House, of a single letter, though there may have been fifty or a hundred; even if there were a thousand, I do not care.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I can not yield further.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to say that what you said the other day, when you stated I was opposed to my bill, was false, and you must have known it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman from New Jersey must recollect that he did say, in the presence of the committee, that he was not now in favor of his bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will not enter into further controversy here as to veracity.

Mr. FOWLER. There was not a man on the committee—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will not yield to the gentleman from New Jersey. The gentleman from New Jersey, certainly by his conduct, coincided with that statement, because since the filing of his bill not one single step has he taken to bring the measure before the House. The gentleman from New Jersey—

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER]?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will not yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. I will state that that is also untrue.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That question may be left to the membership of the House, who thoroughly understand it. There are some Members of the House who, if they should make the accusation made by the gentleman from New Jersey, would cause me extreme sensitiveness, but in this particular case it does not in the least disturb me. [Applause.]

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he does not recollect that I was present in the committee room when the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] made the statement which the gentleman from Ohio stated in his speech the other day, and which the gentleman from New Jersey has just denied? [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do remember it. Does the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] commend his letter that he has read here in the presence of this House? It contains the statement that, under this bill, $1,500,000,000 of money issued by banks is to go out into the country. Does not the gentleman from New Jersey know that statement to be absolutely untrue, and if he does not know that it is untrue, does not every other Member of this House know that it is an absolute misstatement?

There are about $630,000,000 of national-bank notes in circulation, secured by Government bonds. The utmost limit in this bill is $500,000,000, making in all $1,130,000,000. And I must emphatically deny that our monetary system has been the laughing stock of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.] I listened once to the speech of an old blind orator in our State who spoke of the greenback, in figurative language, as crucified by the Pontius Pilates and despised by the Herods of finance, but loved by the people with an ardent fondness, because those notes brought to this country such financial aid that it could prosecute the most terrible of civil wars.

Our national banking system is a good system so far as it goes. The greenback, or the national-bank note, is received in the remotest quarters of the world by peasant or banker as sound money, as money not only of the greatest country on the globe, but as good as ever coined in the mint of king or emperor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

True, our paper money does not have the flexibility that is desirable in a good currency system, and for that reason we are bringing in this bill, this much-abused bill, opposed by some bankers, opposed by some merchants. I am becoming tired, gentlemen, of these telegrams and letters sent in here by men who are either entirely ignorant of the question or else who have some selfish interest to subserve. It is for us, the representatives of the people, to take up this question, bearing in mind the solemnity of our oaths, bearing in mind our duty to our constituents and to the country. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is for us to do something, not rejecting advice, not thinking to spite bankers or capitalists or anyone, but recognizing that the first duty is with us right here in this great representative body, and we shall fail in our chiefest duty unless we show capability to solve the great questions that are before us.

The Vreeland bill is not a model bill; but when you come to take into account the requisites of currency—safety, acceptability to the people, workability, taking these three together, and the fact that no permanent solution is in sight, I want to say to you, my fellow-Representatives, this is the best proposition that has been presented to this House. No element of danger lurks in it; no predatory wealth can take advantage of it; but it can stimulate the healing streams of commerce; it can drive away panic; it can bring benefit to all the people.

We do not wish to present to the people the spectacle of opposing everything and bringing forward a measure only to flee from it as if it were a pestilence, not showing the courage either to vote for it or against it. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] We will not follow the example of the great party which represents the minority. Marshaled in solid array, they nevertheless contented themselves with answering "present!" Why, who supposed you were not present? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote. [Loud and long-continued applause on the Republican side.]

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, for fear the demand might be regarded as dilatory, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 152, nays 104, answered "present" 15, not voting 117, as follows:

For the session:

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. FLOOD.
Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.
Mr. WATSON with Mr. SHEPPARD.
Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RIORDAN.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. SMITH of California with Mr. RICHARDSON.

On this vote:

Mr. OLCOTT (in favor of) with Mr. HARRISON (against).
Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I find I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. I desire to withdraw my vote and ask to be marked "present."

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present," as I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees: Mr. VREELAND, Mr. BURTON of Ohio, Mr. WEEKS, Mr. LEWIS, and Mr. PUJO.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the Chair has just announced certain conferees, among whom were two Democrats, one of whom, Mr. LEWIS, is not here, and I am informed can not be here. I request the Speaker, therefore, to appoint another Democrat in his stead.

The SPEAKER. The conferees committee consists of five. The Chair will let the conferees stand, for the present at least.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GOULDEN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Mrs. E. O. Rorke (H. R. 1722), Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

HOUSE BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, House bills with Senate amendments of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

H. R. 18030. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 19737. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17056. An act for the relief of Capt. Charles E. Morton, Sixteenth United States Infantry;

H. R. 13577. An act providing for resurvey of certain public lands in the State of Nebraska; and

H. R. 16770. An act granting land to Anna Johnson.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4809. An act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to extend the time for the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to legalize the construction of bridges across navigable waters.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6796. An act to refund certain duties inequitably collected on anthracite coal by the collector of customs at Baltimore, Md.—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 7113. An act making appropriations for repairs and reconstruction of buildings destroyed by cyclone at Fort Crook military post—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPRINT.

Mr. FRENCH obtained unanimous consent for a reprint of Senate joint resolution 51, providing for additional lands for Idaho under the provisions of the Carey Act.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 11.30 a. m. to-morrow.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

House concurrent resolution 13.

Whereas the growth and spread of consumption or tuberculosis—commonly known as the "white plague"—in some parts of the United States is becoming prevaillingly prevalent; and

Whereas it is now generally accepted as a fact that this dread disease can be communicated from one person to another, by the healthy person inhaling the diseased breath of the consumptive and also by inhaling dried expectorations carried by the wind; and

Whereas separation of the consumptively afflicted from the well and healthy is one of the best ways and means of preventing the spread of the disease, and to benefit the ailing; Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the legislative assembly of the State of Oklahoma, That the Government of the United States be requested, and the United States is hereby requested, to take early action looking toward the procurement by purchase or cession from the State of Texas, in the arid regions thereof, or Territory of Arizona, a tract of land at least 18 miles square, to be used for a consumptives' home and sanitarium; that the United States is hereby requested to reclaim said tract of land by wells or otherwise, so as to make the same productive, thereby affording the unfortunate an opportunity for profitable outdoor employment in the way of gardening, raising poultry, and engaging in other light enterprises to assist them in earning a competency and as an aid to mind employment at the same time.

That the United States be requested to cut said reserve into small tracts and to improve the same, and to place the same in a cheerful, homelike condition, as far as possible, in order that the unfortunate may find that relief that is awaiting him in the dry, recuperating, health-giving atmosphere of the dry regions above named.

That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

"Secretary of legation to Salvador and consul-general to San Salvador, two thousand dollars; and the provision in the act of May 11, 1908, for a consul-general at San Salvador is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For salaries of consuls-general and consuls, as provided in the act approved May 11, 1908, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States,' approved April 5, 1906,' as follows: Consuls-general, three hundred and three thousand dollars; consuls, seven hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars; in all, one million and thirty-six thousand dollars.

"For salaries of five consular inspectors, at five thousand dollars each, twenty-five thousand dollars."

And the Senate agree to the same.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, yesterday evening I gave notice that I would reserve the right to move to take up the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes. I am very anxious that that bill shall be accorded consideration.

Since yesterday evening's session I have been advised by several Senators of their desire to be heard on the bill, and I realize that at least two of the Senators desiring to address the Senate on the bill during its consideration are so situated with reference to the business of the Senate as to render it quite difficult if not impossible to prepare or to take the time to address the Senate on the subject during the few remaining days of the present session.

I feel, however, that the Senate is entitled to the privilege of voting on this measure. According to my view, there is a distinct majority in the body in favor of it. I do not at the same time desire to work a hardship on any Senator nor seek to violate a usage which has become sacred in the Chamber of allowing Senators a reasonable time to prepare for an address or speech on any bill.

To the end that ample time may be allowed to all Senators who desire to study the bill and to address the Senate upon it, and at the same time make some progress, I ask unanimous consent that the 11th day of January be fixed for a vote on all amendments then pending and on the bill, the final vote to be taken before adjournment on that day.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana the other day made a very clear explanation of the various provisions of the bill. The subject-matter of the bill has been before the public and before Congress for several sessions. I sincerely hope that the Senator who has charge of the bill can make some arrangement with Senators who desire to speak upon it to have those speeches made at the present session, so that a vote can be taken before Congress adjourns.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Montana is proceeding in the right way to get a vote on his bill during the present Congress. Whatever may be the feeling of a majority of the Senate, there are a good many Senators who are opposed to the bill who desire to debate it, and will debate it to the best of their faculty whenever it comes up.

It is a literal impossibility to carry out the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois and get a vote upon this most important and contested measure at the present session. If Congress is to adjourn, as I hope we may, on one of the later days of next week, we can not precipitate into the business of the Senate any such contested measure as this and give it anything like fair consideration. I do not speak for myself alone, but for other Senators who are opposed to the measure and who will debate it when it comes up.

But the Senator is entitled to bring the matter before the Senate during this Congress, and I think his suggestion is a wise one. I shall not object for one to a day being fixed—the day the Senator fixes or any day that suits him—when the matter shall be taken up and disposed of after discussion by the Senate. But I think I am entitled to say, knowing something about the condition of the business and the desires of Senators to adjourn, that it would be impossible to give this measure any proper consideration in the remnant that is left us of the present session.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I had made a motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4825, and doubtless that motion is not debatable. If the Senator from Montana will allow my motion to be put, I will then yield to him for the purpose of making his request.

Mr. CARTER. I trust the Senator from Connecticut will bear in mind—

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if there is to be any general agreement about the bill, I hope it will be so stated that we on this side of the Chamber may know what it is. I do not believe anyone on this side knows what the Senator from Montana is asking.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut object to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will withhold my motion for the present and see if the request can be agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I think it requires very exceptional circumstances to justify the Senate in fixing at one session what business it will take up at another session. This is a very important measure, and it is impossible for us to foresee now whether it can have proper consideration and the Senate will be ready for a vote upon it at the time mentioned. I am constrained, under the circumstances, to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Montana that he move that the bill shall be made a special order for the day named. Then when that time comes the Senate can deal with it as it does with all matters, and when the Senate wants a vote, it is the pride of the Senate that it can say it always gets a vote. The Senator in that way will avoid the objection raised by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CARTER. I would prefer making the special order applicable to an earlier date. I, therefore, move that the postal savings-bank bill be made the special order for the second Monday in December.

Mr. HALE. That does not interfere with the special order already made?

Mr. CARTER. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana moves that the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, be made a special order for the second Monday in December.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask what day of the month that will be?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The 14th of December.

Mr. HALE. That is a week after Congress meets.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the effect of a special order? It means that the bill is to be taken up for consideration, but no vote is to be had at that time, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That it is simply to be made a special order for that day, and then it is in the control of the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana. [Putting the question.] The motion is agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in favor thereof.

NATIONAL FORESTS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I renew my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A reprint of the bill which was ordered yesterday has been made and there are copies here in the Senate which may be distributed. I understand the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] desires to speak this morning. He so stated yesterday.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the bill now under consideration is one of a good deal of importance, and I have no doubt one that has attracted considerable attention. I am going to make my objections to the bill, and make them as briefly as I can, considering the importance of the subject. I know that we are in the last hours of the session, and the Senator who has the bill in charge is anxious to dispose of it; but my sense of duty requires me to make some objections to the bill and to state at some length the reasons why I object to it.

The bill has attracted considerable attention, because it has been fathered and supported by certain interests here at Washington as well as an interest in the vicinity where it is proposed that the forest reservations shall be established. If the bill is adopted, we shall enter upon a system heretofore not touched, and I think I may say heretofore supposed to be entirely outside of the business of the Government of the United States.

In a few words, Mr. President, I will state the proposition. It is to buy a large tract of land in the New England section of the country and create a great forest reserve, and to buy in another section of the country, in the South, another great forest reserve, one to be called the "White Mountain Reserve" and the other to be called the "Appalachian Mountain Reserve." The bill is a modest bill, considering what we are doing. It provides for an appropriation of only $5,000,000, but the plan laid out by the bill would indicate that it would cost probably from $50,000,000 to $150,000,000 before we get through.

It is said by those who are advocating the bill—and I refer more particularly to the forest-reserve people now than to anybody else—that there are 75,000,000 acres of land in these two sections that ought to be incorporated into forest reserves, that ought to be bought by the Government of the United States for that purpose and devoted to that purpose. The price fixed in the various hearings the committee has had for the last three or four years puts the price of the land at from $3.50 to $6 an acre. Five million dollars will not buy very much forest-reserve land at that rate. But I am not concerned about the expense so much as I am about the principle involved in this enterprise. I can not myself escape the conclusion that the Government of the United States is without authority to engage in the business here suggested.

Yesterday the Senator who has the bill in charge, I suppose acting by direction of the committee, had an amendment made to the bill which was, I presume, proposed by the committee to remove some constitutional objection to this proceeding. It will be found on page 3, after the words "United States," in line 3. After the words "for national forest purposes" the words "for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams" were inserted. In approaching that subject I do not want to be offensive to anybody, but it is certain that this is an afterthought, and it has been incorporated in the bill for the purpose of meeting a constitutional objection raised in another place. If I may say it without offense to the committee or to anyone else, I will say it is a mere pretense that the bill is proposed for the purpose of protecting navigation, when in fact it is proposed for an entirely different purpose, and that is for the purchase of land and the incorporation of it by the Government of the United States into a forest not for the purpose of navigation, not to benefit navigable streams, but for the purpose of the preservation of timber and the preservation of the soil on the mountain sides, and to create a summer resort for the citizens of the section who would naturally avail themselves of such a park.

I might say I think there is another purpose in the bill, and that is to secure for the manufacturing people of a certain section more water power, if possible, for the purpose of manufacturing. None of these, in my opinion, are really propositions in the interest of the Federal Government, but in the interest of individuals and possibly of States.

That the purpose is other than the bill declares I shall endeavor to establish by the testimony of witnesses presented by the friends of this measure. The committee of another body has taken testimony on this subject. Practically every witness who appeared before the committee stated the purpose of the bill, and there was no one who did not indicate that there are other purposes than that of navigation. The only possible reason that could be given for this expenditure is that it would improve the navigation of certain rivers that are practically nonnavigable now, or if they are navigable the commerce on them is so small and inconsequential that there is not any excuse for such an outlay of money for the purpose of protecting the waters.

Mr. Andrew J. Peters, of Massachusetts, states:

That the Massachusetts State Board of Trade gives its unqualified indorsement of bills now before Congress for the purpose of acquiring forest reserves in the Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains, to be known as the "Appalachian Reserve" and "White Mountain Forest Reserve," to the end that these areas may be properly controlled and protected, not only for their scenic value, but for the preservation of the sources of water supply of rivers which furnish the power for vast manufacturing interests.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] appeared before the committee and said:

The Senate last year passed the Appalachian forest bill, and it is considered by the people of my State—although no part of the reservation lies in Massachusetts—of the most vital importance to our industries, owing to the rivers and the water supply.

There is not a word there about the navigability of the stream.

Mr. C. J. H. Woodbury said:

I am secretary of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, whose members represent about $750,000,000 in the cotton manufacturing business, with about 20,000,000 spindles, and I wish to present their resolution, which I will file, and also a set of resolutions from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Without taking the time of the committee, I would say that we have four of our members here who are very large manufacturers; and if it is the pleasure of the committee, I know they will add information of great value.

I challenge anybody to find in Mr. Woodbury's statement that there is any idea or any purpose of increasing the water in these rivers for navigable purposes. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the preamble to their resolution says:

(2) The maintenance of these forest tracts tends to conserve the regulation of rainfall, and therefore to the raising of agricultural products and to the health of the people;

(3) The forests are a great advantage to the States in which they are situated from their contribution to the scenic beauties of nature, and furnish conditions of salubrity and comfort during the summer, which form a means of attracting great numbers of summer tourists;

(4) The educational effect of life in the open has been abundantly recognized by the establishment of summer camps for the training of boys in athletics and woodcraft, and permanent places for the encouragement of this important movement would be provided by such reserves as are contemplated;

(5) A forest reserve would furnish opportunity for practical experiments in forestry and for demonstrating the value of the cultivation of trees, and would also serve as a place for the protection of the wild creatures of the woods, many of which are threatened with extinction;

(6) The conservation of the forests would tend to husband a portion of the national wealth, which had been grossly wasted by careless methods of cutting, and we believe that under the skilled supervision which such reservations would be expected to receive that the supply from the natural forest growth would be made a source of material income toward the expenses involved in the maintenance of the whole tract.

Mr. President, is there anything anywhere in that resolution, coming from one of the most intelligent bodies in Massachusetts, that would indicate that this was for the purpose of conserving the water for commerce? I have gone through this entire hearing and I do not believe that there is 1 per cent of the statements made that have any reference whatever to commerce or to preserving the water for commercial purposes. I will call attention to some of these, but not to all of them.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there any method which the Senator from Colorado can suggest of preserving the commercial water of the streams other than by this method of preserving the forests?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, in the first place, I do not know whether there is or not; but I do know that if there is, it has not been suggested, and I know further this bill is not here for the purpose of protecting the water, but for another purpose entirely. It may be that incidentally they may protect some of the water of those rivers; but that was not the purpose of the bill when it was reported, and it has not been until within the last few days; and then only when a distinguished lawyer in the other House declared that, unless that was the primary and sole purpose, it was not within the provisions of the Constitution of the United States that we should engage in this business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator if he does not think that the language in the original bill, before it was amended at all, which authorized the purchase of lands more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for other purposes, situated on the watersheds of navigable streams in the Appalachian Mountains distinctly points to the conservation of water in the streams and the preservation of the navigation of the streams?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if it does point to it, the committee did not think it was sufficient, and therefore they reported the amendment. But I understand—and the testimony will show it—that the bill referred to the use of water for water power and not for navigation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield once more—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. I yield, of course.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If that was so, there would have been no sense in using the word "navigable," because water can furnish power whether a river is navigable or not.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the people who have been advocating this measure have been advocating it not in the interest of navigation, but in the interest of forest reserves as reserves. They have been interested in saving the water for water power and the timber for public use.

Mr. Pinchot, who is supposed to know all about forests, and to whom, I understand, some people bow supinely and are ready to take anything he says as law and gospel on this subject—I heard him applauded here as the man who had come to save the forests of this country—Mr. Pinchot appeared before the committee, and I will show before I get through that that agency has been the active and moving cause which has prepared, provided, and sent out laws to be enacted and resolutions to be passed, and he is here now. He starts out by saying:

In a statement which I had the honor of making before the Committee on Agriculture last week I said that the United States was in a dangerous condition in regard to the timber supply. We are on the verge of a timber famine, indicated by the high prices to which timber has risen in the last few years, and by the fact that the best estimates now available indicate a total supply in the country, neglecting growth, for only about twenty years, and that the most liberal allowances which could be made for that growth would not extend the supply more than an additional ten years.

Then, Mr. President, he goes on to speak of the destruction and scarcity of timber, and all that, and says not a word about commerce. Then he proceeds to refer to the danger from fire and the destruction thereby of this timber, and he recommends the buying of these lands. He says that he thinks the Government could make some money in that way. I will read what he says:

With the rapid rise in the price of timber, there is no question whatever but that we would find in the United States the same experience which other nations have had, so that our timber lands will pay a large net revenue over and above expenses, just as they do now in Germany, France, Austria-Hungary, and so on, ranging from $1 to $5 and $6 per annum an acre, net. As a strictly business proposition, from a revenue point of view, there can be no doubt that these lands will pay.

One word in conclusion, Mr. Chairman. In my judgment not only will it pay from a business point of view, because of the timber, to acquire these lands, but the prevention of floods, the protection of water power, the protection of the soil, and especially the maintenance of navigable streams.

That is the only suggestion of that character in this statement when he finally gets down to navigable streams.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. TELLER. I am reading from the hearings before the House committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to remind the Senator from Colorado that Mr. Pinchot stated that this reservation would especially benefit the navigability of streams.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly; I have read what he said. I did not intend to leave that out, Mr. President, but that was subordinate to the other purposes.

Now, if I do not delay the Senate too long, I wish to speak somewhat about the importance of the navigability of streams in the section of the United States embraced in the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, before the Senator from Colorado gets through, I wish to ask him a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the navigability of the streams is involved and this forest reserve conserves that purpose, does the Senator from Colorado see any objection to the plan merely because, as incident to that larger matter, the Government shall sell the down timber and the dead timber and derive a revenue from it at the same time?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the Senator from Indiana may think are the functions of the General Government, but my education has led me to believe that it could not enter into the timber business, that it has no concern with the timber business, and that it is not to be the paramount business, and it is not what it is here declared to be.

Mr. President, before I get through I am going to deny that there is any necessity of protecting the water for navigation, and that was not in the thought of anybody who inaugurated this scheme. It never has been. It has been for a forest reserve, that the Government of the United States might have a game reserve, might have a place where timber could be raised and where timber could be profitably sold.

Mr. President, you can not by a pretense make lawful that which is unlawful; you can not by inserting in a bill that a certain thing is the primary object, when it is not the object, make a bill constitutional when it is not constitutional; and I am going to cite the authority of Members of the House Committee on the Judiciary to that effect. But it is a common-law proposition that you can not do indirectly what you can not do directly—that is, you can not do a thing pretending it is for one purpose when really you are trying to do it for another purpose if the right to do the thing is denied or forbidden.

Then Mr. Phillip W. Ayres appeared before the committee. He said he was a forester. I do not know whether he is one who is connected with the Forest Reserve Service of the United States; but he said he was a forester.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that Mr. Phillip W. Ayres is connected with a volunteer forestry association in the State of New Hampshire. He is a cultivated, educated gentleman and, I think, a graduate of a forestry school. He has no connection with the United States Government.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. He says:

I wish to speak especially of the method of removing the timber and its wastefulness, and incidentally I have some figures about the White Mountain region which I will not read to the committee, but which cover the forested area of the White Mountains and the yields and stands in the different portions of them, the value of the stumpage and of the timber on those several watersheds, and particularly some tables with regard to the extension of the cutting of spruce, which is limited in area, and upon which the supply of newspaper material throughout the entire United States depends. We feel that the White Mountains in this respect differ from the southern mountains, in that they produce a material which at present is limited in the area of its growth, and which is used universally through the country—

That is, spruce, which is used for paper making—and that the White Mountains, with the areas immediately adjoining in the other States, ship their product, the spruce pulp, to all parts of the United States; and if the waste of the spruce timber continues as it has in the last few years, the entire country must suffer in that respect.

Mr. President, what has the Government of the United States to do with the waste of spruce timber in New Hampshire or anywhere else? Of course I know there has been here recently a distinguished gathering to see about conserving the natural products of the country. It is the States that ought to conserve those resources and not the General Government. I am in favor of forest reserves, but I am not in favor of the Government of the United States going into the business for the purpose of preserving game or forests, because there is no such power given to it under the Constitution; and if this bill had been taken up six months ago, the advocates of it would have based their arguments upon the necessity of the preservation of the forests as forests and not upon their preservation for the purpose of conserving the water supply and promoting the navigability of streams. They were educated by what occurred in another body to make the distinction between forests and water which they are now trying to make.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But I think I can point out a fact within our own experience here—

Mr. TELLER. I am not going to yield to the Senator to make a speech. I thought he wanted to ask a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not rise to ask a question. I merely wanted to call attention to what occurred here at the last session; but if it interrupts the Senator, I will not do so.

Mr. TELLER. I have told the Senator who has this bill in charge that, although I would vote against it, I would not purposely delay the vote on it. I am not talking against time, and I hope to be excused from any unnecessary interruptions. I will gladly answer questions.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator from Colorado is mistaken in one statement he has made. As I understood him, he said that the idea of preserving these forests to protect the water supply and the navigability of the streams has only been suggested since the report of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. As I understood him, previous to that time the idea was merely to preserve the forests without considering their relation to the water supply. I see here a report made on April 13, in which they go into the question of the water supply very fully, and it seems devoted more to that than to anything else. It is a supplemental report.

Mr. TELLER. That arose from the fact that the chairman of the committee contended that this bill was not for the purpose of increasing the water supply and promoting the navigability of streams, and was not within the constitutional authority and power of Congress. Of course he then went into the whole subject. But that is what inspired the supporters of the bill to base their arguments upon the proposition that by preserving the forests navigation would be promoted. I am not speaking of the Senatorial supporters of the bill, but I am speaking of those outside, because it has been in season and out of season forced upon us for the last two years, and hundreds of associations and individuals have been telegraphing and writing in its interest.

Mr. Ayres is high up in forestry matters, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] says, and I again quote from him:

The method of cutting timber on the mountain slopes is the most destructive possible. The growth of the timber on the mountain sides is such that when a portion of the trees are removed the rest of them are likely to topple over with the heavy wind. The soil on the mountain sides is thin, and the growth is slow, the summers are short and cold, the elevation being between 3,000 and 4,000 feet, and with the pure spruce stands in that mountain region the growth is such that it requires one hundred and twenty-five years for a spruce tree to become 6 inches in diameter, which is the smallest merchantable size. These trees are swept off in their entirety, and although the operators do not use the entire amount of the timber, sometimes using only one-half or sometimes only one-fourth of it, the entire mountain side is stripped in order that the trees which are of sufficient size may roll over their prostrate neighbors to get down to the logging slopes; so that one-fourth to three-quarters of the forest is needlessly destroyed in order that the logs may be gotten out more easily. The Forest Service has prepared two albums, one of the Appalachian region and one of the White Mountain region, showing the methods of logging in these mountains.

That was brought to my notice, I think, at least a couple of years ago.

These albums are here before you, and these pictures show the perfect, clean, razor-like cutting off of the mountains, and they are indicative, they are entirely typical of the Northern States and of the Southern States, and the results are simply alarming. I believe I am not inclined to make extreme statements, but let me prove my point. In the first place, it is almost invariable that fire follows the debris which is left in such great quantities on the mountain side. Even if fire does not follow, the exposure to the sun of the roots of the trees that remain and of their stems kills them off, so the fact remains that there are no trees whatever over very large areas.

Then the chairman asked this question:

Has any State, to your knowledge, ever attempted to prevent by legislation such wasteful lumbering?

Mr. Ayres replied:

I believe that it has not. There are many individuals that have done it. There are many of our States that now have forestry commissions and State foresters which endeavor to get at their individual owners and prevent this. There are States like New York, Pennsylvania, and Michigan and other States which own forest tracts which are put in proper forest management. But I know of no legislation in any State which undertakes to prevent the individual from doing what he will with his own land.

Mr. President, I do not wonder at that. There would be a good deal of trouble, I think, in saying to a man, "You must not cut your timber unless you cut it under certain conditions." All through his testimony Mr. Ayres shows that he is not talking about navigation or commerce, and did not have it in his mind at all. Perhaps if he were called back and read Mr. JENKINS's report, he might have some further ideas to advance. I can not read all his statement, but later on he said:

These tables I have here will show you facts with regard to the spruce and hard woods of the White Mountains, on which the country is dependent for its supply of paper.

On the next page is the testimony of Mr. I. C. White, State geologist of West Virginia. All the way through he is in favor of this proposition, because of the preservation of forests. He speaks about preserving—this great belt of timber and at the same time preserve the water supply, which will keep up the navigation of these rivers and make these dams which cost so much money, and which are so vital to the transportation interests of the country, useful for all time.

To that extent he referred to the relation of forest preservation to the navigability of streams.

I now quote from the testimony of Mr. A. M. Schoen, on page 736. He says:

I regret that I am not able to say anything about the White Mountains, as I am not conversant with that section. Mr. Porter, of Boston, was to have been here to speak of them. But there are other gentlemen here who will speak on that section. In the South nearly all our streams from which we obtain power for cotton mills or other purposes take their rise in the Southern Appalachians, and the denudation of the forest growth on these slopes will necessarily affect the flow of these streams, and especially in its uniformity.

Then he takes up the question of water power and the value of water power on the James River, which I suppose is one of the most valuable water powers of the United States, at least I have always been led to suppose so from what I have learned of it. It has a fine fall, and there is a fair amount of water. I find here a statement of the value of the water power of the forest streams. It is quite incomprehensible that this bill is in the interest alone of commerce to preserve the navigability of the rivers when the main feature of this whole statement is either that the timber is valuable and we are to save the timber and make money out of the timber, or that the water power is valuable and we are to make money out of the water power. This gentleman gives an estimate as to the water power of several rivers. I take it from his testimony that he thinks the water power belongs to the United States, though I am not quite clear, after reading it, whether he believed that or whether he believed that it belonged to the State. He says:

In going over that list I find that the Potomac River has 131,000 horsepower available and undeveloped, the Rappahannock 30,000 horsepower, which is projected and to be developed very shortly; the James River 23,000 developed near Richmond, and the available but undeveloped horsepower is very difficult to ascertain on account of the fact that the railroad runs very close to the bed of the river, that being a valley road, and a large development can not be effected without the consent of the railroad. The Appomattox River has 5,000 horsepower developed near Petersburg and 10,000 undeveloped, which will be developed at no late date; the Roanoke River, with 2,000 horsepower developed and 75,000 available; the Yadkin, with 87,000 horsepower developed and 80,000 available but undeveloped—

And so forth.

So he proceeds, dealing entirely with the water power. He comes down to the number of spindles that are being run by water power and how many might be run by water power, and then he makes some calculations of what the value of the water power will be. He concludes that the water power of the rivers he has named has a value of $48,780,000 per annum. If that is so, Virginia is very rich in water power, and Virginia ought to be able to take care of all her forests and all the water that is necessary to keep up the water-power supply.

Another man came in and testified, who also dealt with the question of water power. He proceeded in the same way—I am not going to attempt to read all of this, because it would occupy too much time—but he goes on to speak about the rivers and the number of spindles, which is very great. Then comes the engineer of the Southern Power Company, who is a North Carolina man.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is his name?

Mr. TELLER. His name is W. F. Lee. His interest is shown by his testimony to be in the water power and not in the forests. He wants the forest to be preserved because it will create water power. Then he goes on to tell how cheaply water power can be used. He says:

We have been selling that power at about half what it could be made for by steam. This additional expense that we are going to in supplementing our water power with steam power is going to increase our rates. Our men who are financing this are going to ask for a fair return on their money, and it is going to mean that the advantages those people have had by reason of having that cheaper power will in part disappear. They have got to pay a fair return on these investments that will guarantee them their power.

I could read a good deal more of this, but will not do so. I only read enough to show that the primary purpose and the avowed object of this proposed legislation is not the preservation of the water supply and the navigability of streams, but the preservation of the forests and timber.

Mr. G. F. Swaine said, among other things:

I should like to say that the engineers, so far as I can speak for them, are very apprehensive with reference to the question of the timber supply. They realize that, as Mr. Pinchot has said, a timber famine is in sight, and they are asking themselves what they shall do ten or fifteen years from now, when the price of timber rises still higher and timber is still more difficult to obtain.

And all the way through is the same talk about timber. He continues:

Now, the regulation of the rivers affects the water powers, the preservation of the soil, and the navigation of the streams.

That is his first reference to streams—

The destruction of the forests is a very serious element as affecting the regulation of the flow of the streams, etc.

On the next page he says:

Now, the manufactures of New England grew up because of the water power. The city of Lowell, the city of Lawrence, were built because there were large water powers there on the streams, and all along our New England streams these large cities like Lawrence and Lowell and Manchester and Lewiston and Biddeford and others, Holyoke, Turners Falls, Bellows Falls, have grown up largely on account of the presence there of these large water powers.

Then he goes into some estimate of the value of these water powers. That is undoubtedly one of the reasons why people want to preserve the water in that country, not for navigation, but for water-power purposes. He said, in answer to a question, that he found all the manufacturers of New England favorable to this scheme. Undoubtedly that is true, Mr. President.

Then here is Mr. Edwin A. Start, who complains of fires, and I want to call attention to his testimony:

Mr. HAWLEY. Under your New England fire laws, do you exercise supervision over fires built for the burning up of brush on private property?

Mr. START. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. And do you require permission to be issued before they can burn brush on their property?

Mr. START. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. To what extent are those fire laws in force along the region it is proposed that this White Mountain and Appalachian reservation should include?

Mr. START. Very little. It would be almost impossible to enforce such laws.

Mr. President, it is apparent that the Government of the United States is to take upon itself under this system the enforcing of laws that the States themselves do not attempt to enforce.

Before I get through I will come to the question whether the Government can enforce the laws there. When one of the witnesses was asked whether there would be reservoirs, he replied he thought the power companies would build reservoirs. This is Mr. Woodbury, secretary of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers:

The cotton manufacturers in New England have, from time to time, an opportunity afforded, exerted all of their interest toward these forest-preservation laws, which have been summarized by Mr. Start before. They authorized me to come here, and the governor of Massachusetts also gave me permission to represent the Commonwealth. They have sent down four men, four large manufacturers, of whom Mr. Dumaine appeared before you this morning—he has under his charge very nearly twice as many spindles as any man in the world—and two other gentlemen, Hon. Arthur Low, of Pittsburg, who has mills at Pittsburg, at Clinton in Massachusetts, and at Huntsville, Ga., who was obliged to go back, as was also Mr. Joseph B. Gray, hydrographic expert of the Locks and Canal Company.

These mills are large users of water. They use a great deal of water in bleaching and dyeing.

I have a very large number of points marked here, but I aver now that an examination will show that the real purpose of those who appeared before the committee was either to secure the forests as forests or the water power for manufacturing purposes and not for commerce, and they had no thought of it for that purpose, except incidentally.

I am coming to another feature of this matter, which is not as pleasing to me even as what I am going to skip. I wish to say that I have not read anything like the amount I might read to show that the whole purpose of this is not for commerce, but for another purpose. I find here this, to which I call attention. It is from the statement of Harvey N. Shepard, of Boston, Mass.:

There are 10,000,000 people within easy and accessible distance of the White Mountains, who come there year after year—clerks, teachers, people of small salaries—who can gain only a few days' vacation, and they get that exhilaration that comes to a man or a woman when he has climbed a high mountain and looks out upon the forests and all the beauties of nature. That is something that is worth more than any material consideration. It is something that can not be reckoned in money.

They want the Government of the United States to take upon itself the obligation to provide amusement of that kind for the people.

Then he goes on to tell about a club which has been organized there, and it has provided the means of getting into the woods, and so forth and so on. On another page the same gentleman says:

The great manufacturing possibilities of the future of the country depend upon your action. I do not, gentlemen, urge at this time the reservoir system presented by your Government expert who spoke a few moments ago. That may be a question of the future.

The whole theory of this man was that it would help manufacturing. Mr. Sullivan, president of the Board of Trade of Lawrence, Mass., says:

The city of Lawrence has 80,000 people, and it is growing at the rate of three or four thousand a year. Within a mile and a half are 20,000 more people, so we have in all about 100,000 people. We not only live by the stream, which turns the wheels, but we drink the water of that river; we live on it practically. We are obliged to filter this water at an expense of nearly $200,000 for filter galleries, the first in this country—

I suppose the Government will, when it gets into this business, provide the filters as well as the water—

If you allow the forests to be destroyed, you destroy the city of Lawrence. This is a peculiar position, but you know that if we were to ask you to-day to protect our city against the approach of enemies to destroy it, Congress would appropriate millions of dollars. We ask you now in peace to preserve the means by which we exist. Our position is peculiar. We live on this river, we depend on it for drinking, for turning the machinery, and for other purposes.

It seems to me that if a city of that kind is in such danger, it ought to be able to control the State authorities and have the State protect the water.

I am coming to the action of the several States, and I confess that I have been a good deal surprised of late years at the things done in high official circles, and I have had to reorganize somewhat my ideas of the powers of the General Government as now asserted, not only in the executive department, but here in this branch of the Government. But there are some things that I do not believe anybody will seriously contend for; that is to say, I do not believe Congress can give to any State any authority which it did not possess the moment it became a State. I do not believe Congress can take away from a State anything that belonged to it when it became a State.

Mr. President, there are a number of bills which have been passed by different States, and every one of them, I venture to say, went out from the Forestry Service, with the request that it be enacted into law, because they all bear the imprint of that office and all are practically the same in their theory of what the State might and ought to do. Let me read section 18½ of the Alabama act:

Sec. 18½. That the consent of the State of Alabama be, and is hereby, given to the acquisition by the United States, by purchase or gift, or by condemnation according to law, of such land in Alabama as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed for the establishment of such a national forest reserve in this region.

Mind you, that has nothing to do with water. That is a forest reserve.

Provided, That the State shall retain a concurrent jurisdiction with the United States in and over such lands so far that civil process in all cases, and such criminal process as may issue under the authority of the State against any person charged with a commission of any crime without or within said jurisdiction, may be executed thereon in like manner as if this act had not been passed. In all condemnation proceedings the right to the Federal Government shall be limited to the specific objects set forth by the laws of the United States in regard to forest reserves.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from what page he reads?

Mr. TELLER. I am reading from the hearings before the House committee. If the Senator has the document, it is page 788.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Thanks.

Mr. TELLER. Here is a most remarkable proposition, and it could not have emanated from any place except the Forestry Service. There is no other place in the public service where such a thing could have been thought of or invented.

That power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws and to make or provide for the making of such rules and regulations of both civil and criminal nature, and provide punishment for violation thereof as in its judgment may be necessary for the management, control, and protection of such lands as may from time to time be acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BORAH. Is that in the Alabama act?

Mr. TELLER. That is in the Alabama act, and it is practically repeated in the acts of several other States.

The power is hereby conferred upon Congress.

I do not believe any Senator will rise here and say that that act confers any power upon Congress. I do not think anybody will assert that even for a moment.

Mr. DANIEL. Was it a cession to the United States?

Mr. TELLER. No, sir; not a cession. It does not cede. It says it is concurrent and not a cession. Story said that the Government of the United States could not take a qualified cession; it must take an absolute cession. He said that the jurisdiction of the United States means absolute jurisdiction; and he repeated that two or three times in different opinions. That is more than fifty years old. It ought to be self-evident to everybody that we can not as a nation divide our sovereignty with any other sovereignty or half sovereignty; and certainly Congress can not confer upon the States any power that the States do not have.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. I will.

Mr. DANIEL. I do this for the enlightenment of the meditation of the Senator on the subject. Section 8 of this bill provides:

Sec. 8. That the jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, over persons upon the lands acquired under this act shall not be affected or changed by their permanent reservation and administration as national forest lands, except so far as the punishment of offenses against the United States is concerned, the intent and meaning of this section being that the State wherein such land is situated shall not, by reason of such reservation and administration, lose its jurisdiction nor the inhabitants thereof their rights and privileges as citizens or be absolved from their duties as citizens of the State.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Do you believe that Congress has any authority to pass that provision and make it effective?

Mr. DANIEL. I do not like to give an opinion on the subject offhand. I have never studied it before, but I should doubt the propriety of that section. I want to hear the Senator's opinion.

Mr. TELLER. I regard it as an elementary principle of government that Congress can neither increase the power of a State nor diminish the power of a State. I know at the close of the great war there was an attempt to diminish the powers of the States, but whenever the Supreme Court has had an opportunity it has declared that it could not be done, no matter how guilty the people might be of crimes against the United States. The State was still there and with the same rights it had before the war began.

I intended to come to that, but I will pass it and read some of the others, and then I want to say what I think about it. I will take Georgia. The act is as follows:

An act to give consent by the State of Georgia to the acquisition by the United States of such lands as may be needed for the establishment of a national forest reserve in said State.

Whereas it is proposed that the Federal Government establish in the high mountain regions of Georgia and adjacent States a national forest reserve, which will perpetuate these forests and forever preserve the headwaters of many important streams, and which will thus prove of great and permanent benefit to the people of this State; and whereas a bill has been introduced in the Federal Congress providing for the purchase of such lands for said purpose, the general assembly of Georgia do enact:

SECTION 1. That the consent of the State of Georgia be, and is hereby, given to the acquisition by the United States, by purchase or gift, or by condemnation according to the law, of such lands in the mountain region of Georgia as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed to the establishment of such a national forest reserve in that region: Provided, That the State shall retain a concurrent jurisdiction with the United States in and over such lands so far as that civil process in all cases, and such criminal process as may issue under the authority of the State against any person charged with the commission of any crime without or within said jurisdiction, may be executed in like manner as if this act had not been passed: And provided, That in all condemnation proceedings the rights of the Federal Government shall be limited to the specific objects set forth by the laws of the United States in regard to forest reserves.

SEC. 2. That power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws as it may deem necessary to the acquisition as hereinbefore provided, for incorporation in said national forest reserves, of such mountain lands lying in Georgia as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed for this purpose.

SEC. 3. Power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws and to make or provide for the making of such rules and regulations, of both civil and criminal nature, and provide punishment therefor, as in its judgment may be necessary for the management, control, and protection of such land as may be from time to time acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act.

This act shall be in force from its passage.

It is mighty kind on the part of the State of Georgia to allow Congress to pass such laws as it wants to. I thought myself that the Constitution of the United States determined what Congress could pass, and I did not know that all the people of the United States voting or all the people of the States voting or all of the States combined could give Congress any power that did not exist the day the Constitution was adopted, or which was not created by the subsequent amendments to the Constitution.

There is but one way in which you can confer upon Congress power which it has not got, and that is by an amendment of the Constitution; that is, by the verdict of the American people expressed in the way the Constitution provides it shall be. The States did not make the Constitution. It is true, they had something to do with it. The Supreme Court has said again and again that the people of the United States made the Constitution, and it is the people's Constitution, and in the very preamble it is declared that it is made by the people of the United States, and the courts have sustained that.

Now, Mr. President, Virginia. I see before me the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I want to call his attention to this act. I venture to say that the Senator from Virginia never saw this before. I doubt whether any considerable number of the people of Virginia ever heard of it. It went up from the Department to the people of Virginia, and they were asked to put it through. This is a little different from the others.

Resolved by the senate of Virginia, the house of delegates concurring, That the general assembly of Virginia hereby expresses its approval of the movement looking to the establishment by the Federal Government of an extensive national forest in the Southern Appalachian Mountain region—

I want to call attention that in every movement of this kind it is a forest. There is not a suggestion about streams in any one of these acts—as a wise and beneficent measure, such as many other nations have already adopted and which this country has already adopted in the West—

That is not true. We have never adopted any such proposition in the West. The Government has taken its own lands and put them in forests, but never has taken anybody's else. I believe it did exchange some acres and put them into forests. It made an exchange under the statute which we provided, but it is a very different thing for the Government to buy lands to make forest reserves and taking its own lands for that purpose—and should adopt in the East before it is too late, looking to the conservation of its forests and the protection of the sources of important streams; and

Whereas the general assembly of Virginia has already passed an act granting the State's consent to the acquisition of lands in Virginia by the Federal Government for incorporation in such a forest reserve, believing the reserve to be one of great importance to the people of this State; and

Whereas a bill is now before the Federal Congress providing for the purchase of lands for this purpose:

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State are hereby requested to urge upon Congress the importance of prompt and favorable action in behalf of this measure, and that copies of this resolution be sent to the Senators and Representatives from Virginia.

Then follows the act referred to:

An act to give consent by the State of Virginia to acquisition by the United States of such lands as may be needed for the establishment of a national forest reserve in the said State. Approved February 15, 1901.

Whereas it is proposed that the Federal Government establish in the high mountain regions of Virginia and adjacent States a national forest reserve, which will perpetuate these forests forever and preserve the headwaters of many important streams, and which will prove of great and permanent benefit to the people of this State; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Federal Congress providing for the purchase of such lands for said purpose; Therefore

Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That the consent of the State of Virginia be, and is hereby, given to the acquisition by the United States, by purchase or gift, or by condemnation according to law, of such lands in Virginia as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed for the establishment of such a national forest reserve in that region: Provided, That the State shall retain a concurrent jurisdiction with the United States in and over such lands so far as that civil process in all cases, and such criminal process as may issue under the authority of the State against any person charged with the commission of any crime without or within said jurisdiction, may be executed thereon in like manner as if this act had not been passed: And provided, That in all condemnation proceedings the rights of the Federal Government shall be limited to the specific objects set forth by the laws of the United States in regard to forest reserves.

2. That the power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws as it may deem necessary to the acquisition, as hereinbefore provided, for incorporation in said national forest reserve such forest-covered lands lying in Virginia as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed for this purpose.

There is not a word about preserving the rivers. They might have taken the country where there was not any water at all, if they saw fit, under this.

It is incomprehensible to me that any legislative body in this country would believe it could confer authority upon Congress.

3. Power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws and to make or provide for the making of such rules and regulations of both civil and criminal nature—

It is incomprehensible to me that any legislative body in this country would believe it could confer such authority upon Congress.

And provide punishment for violation thereof, as in its judgment may be necessary for the management, control, and protection of such lands as may be from time to time acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act.

Then North Carolina came in:

An act to give consent by the State of North Carolina to the acquisition by the United States of such lands as may be needed for the establishment of a national forest reserve in said State.

Whereas it is proposed that the Federal Government purchase lands in the high mountain regions of western North Carolina and adjacent States for the purpose of establishing there a national forest reserve which will perpetuate these forests and forever preserve the headwaters of many important streams, and which will thus prove of great and permanent benefit to the people of this State; and whereas a bill has been introduced in the Federal Congress providing for the purchase of such lands for said purpose: Therefore, the general assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. That the consent of the general assembly of North Carolina be, and is hereby, given to the acquisition by the United States, by purchase or by condemnation, with adequate compensation except as hereinafter provided, of such lands in western North Carolina as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed for the establishment of such a national forest reserve in that region: Provided, That the State of North Carolina shall retain a concurrent jurisdiction with the United States in and over such lands so far that civil process in all cases and such criminal process as may issue under the authority of the State of North Carolina against any person charged with the commission of any crime without or within said jurisdiction may be executed thereon in like manner as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 2. That power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws as it may deem necessary to the acquisition as hereinafter provided for incorporation in said national forest reserve such forest-covered lands lying in western North Carolina as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed for this purpose: Provided, That as much as 200 acres of any tract of land occupied as a home by bona fide residents in this State at the date of the ratification of this act shall be exempt from the provisions of this section.

SEC. 3. Power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws and to make or provide for the making of such rules and regulations of both civil and criminal nature, and provide punishment therefor, as in its judgment may be deemed necessary for the management, control, and protection of such lands as may be from time to time acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. This act shall be in force from and after its ratification. In the general assembly, read three times, and ratified this the 18th day of January, A. D. 1901.

W. D. TURNER,
President of the Senate.

WALTER E. MOORE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Then here is New Hampshire. Now, New Hampshire may have some interest in this matter:

That the consent of the State of New Hampshire be, and is hereby, given to the acquisition by the United States by purchase, or condemnation according to law of such lands in this State as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed for the establishment of a national forest reserve in the White Mountain region.

The Senator who has this bill in charge would incorporate into that, if he had an opportunity, for the purpose of protecting the waters of the country, but unfortunately the Department which inaugurated this and has supported it and backed it did not then dream that the Government did not have the authority to take this land and do with it as it saw fit.

Tennessee passed two acts providing practically the same thing. As I said, every one of these acts came from the same author, from the same place, and whoever it was, he had the same idea:

TENNESSEE.

A resolution favoring the establishment of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountain region.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring): The general assembly of Tennessee hereby expresses its approval of the movement looking to the establishment by the Federal Government of an extensive national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountain region as a wise and beneficent measure, such as many other nations have already adopted, and which this country has already adopted in the West and should adopt in the East before it is too late, looking to the conservation of its forests and the protection of the sources of important streams; and

Whereas the proposal to establish this forest reserve has been approved and urged by the leading scientific societies and forestry associations of this country and by the general press; and

Whereas this general assembly has before it a bill granting the State's consent to the acquisition of lands in eastern Tennessee by the Federal Government for incorporation in such a forest reserve, believing the reserve to be one of great importance to the people of this State; and

Whereas a bill is now before the Federal Congress providing for the purchase of lands for this purpose:

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State are hereby requested to urge upon Congress the importance of prompt and favorable action in behalf of this measure.

An act to give consent by the State of Tennessee to the acquisition by the United States of such lands as may be needed for the establishment of a national forest reserve in the said State.

Whereas it is proposed that the Federal Government establish in the high mountain regions of eastern Tennessee and adjacent States a national forest reserve, which will perpetuate these forests, and forever preserve the headwaters of many important streams, and which will thus prove of great and permanent benefit to the people of this State; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Federal Congress providing for the purchase of such lands for said purpose: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Tennessee:

SECTION 1. That the consent of the State of Tennessee be, and is hereby, given to the acquisition by the United States, by purchase, gift, or condemnation according to law, of such lands in this State as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed for the establishment of such a national forest reserve in that region:

Provided, That the State shall retain the concurrent jurisdiction with the United States in and over such lands, so far that civil process in all cases, and such criminal process as may issue under the authority of the State against any person charged with the commission of any crime without or within said jurisdiction, may be executed thereon in like manner as if this act had not been passed.

Provided further, That this act shall apply to lands in Tennessee lying within 20 miles of the North Carolina State line; that all condemnation proceedings herein provided shall be limited to lands now forest covered, and that in all such condemnation proceedings the right of the Federal Government shall be limited to the specific objects set forth in this act and in the laws of the United States in regard to forest reserves.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws as it may deem necessary to the acquisition, as hereinafter provided, for incorporation in said national forest reserve such forest-covered lands lying in the State as in the opinion of the Federal Government may be needed for this purpose.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws and to make or provide for the making of such rules and regulations of both civil and criminal nature, and provide punishment for violation thereof, as in its judgment may be necessary for the management, control, and protection of such lands as may be from time to time acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That this act take effect from and after its passage, the public welfare requiring it.

Passed April 16, 1901.

Then, an astonishing thing is that here is the State of Maine doing the same thing.

Whereas certain permanent and summer residents of this State have taken steps to memorialize Congress for the establishment of a national forest reserve in the White Mountain region.

That is for summer residences—summer homes.

Whereas the establishment of such a reserve would perpetuate valuable forest growths and forever preserve the headwaters of several important streams and thus benefit the commerce, industry, and agriculture of all the New England States save one; and

Whereas the White Mountain region is of increasing importance as a pleasure resort to fully one-quarter of the entire population of the country who reside within easy reach of it: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives in general court convened, That the legislature of Maine hereby expresses its approval of the proposition to establish a White Mountain national forest reserve.

That the consent of the State of Maine be, and is hereby, given to the acquisition by the United States by purchase, gift, or condemnation according to law, of such lands in this State as, in the opinion of the Federal Government, may be needed for the establishment of a national forest reserve in the White Mountain region.

That power is hereby conferred upon Congress to pass such laws and make and provide for the making of such rules and regulations of both civil and criminal nature and provide punishment for the violation thereof as, in its judgment, may be necessary for the management, control, and protection of such lands as may from time to time be acquired by the United States under the provisions of this joint resolution: Provided, That the State of Maine shall retain a concurrent jurisdiction with the United States in and over such lands so far as that civil process in all cases, and such criminal process as may issue under the authority of the State against any person charged with the commission of crime, without or within said jurisdiction, may be executed therein in like manner as if this joint resolution had not been passed.

That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State are hereby requested to urge upon Congress the importance of prompt and favorable action on behalf of the proposition to establish a White Mountain national forest reserve.

Every one of the provisions which I have read is indicative of the fact that this is a forest reserve and not a water preserve.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. TELLER. I do not want the Senator to make a speech, because I want to get through. I will let him ask a question or make a brief suggestion. Otherwise I fear I shall get into a discussion that will last all day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The suggestion I wish to make is a very brief one.

Mr. TELLER. I promised to be as brief as I could.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It seems apparent from the State legislation to which the Senator has referred that the chief consideration they had in view at that time was the preservation of the forests and the timber supply and as sources of power, as increasing the water power, for the purpose of manufacturing, and so forth. But the Senator will observe that within the last two or three years there has been a great movement in this country toward the waterways for purposes of navigation. That movement has taken a very intense form within the last two or three years. Does not the Senator realize that that is the uppermost idea in the minds of the people of this country, that the waterways shall be developed to their highest use for navigation and incidentally for the other purposes?

Mr. TELLER. The evidence before me justifies me in saying it is a second thought and not the first. I do not agree with the Senator that the people have gone wild about waterways since the Inland Waterways Commission was organized and started on its trip down the Mississippi River. I am not saying anything against the Commission.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Inland Waterways Commission is simply the outgrowth of this movement. There was a great demand upon the part of all the people living within the region of the waterways that there should be a development, and that demand has been met, as I understand, by the President appointing a commission for the purpose of recommending to Congress a broad and comprehensive plan for the development of the waterways. The appointment of the Commission was the result of the agitation and was not the cause of the agitation.

Mr. TELLER. I think I keep fairly in touch with the public on these questions. I have been here a good many years, and I have been a waterways man myself. I have voted for all the development of rivers, because I thought it was a constitutional right and constitutional duty. I deny that there is any more interest in it to-day than there was thirty years ago, when I came into the Senate—not a bit more. It has been discussed less in the last ten years than it was during the previous ten years or before that. It is true, I think, that the Inland Waterways Commission did stir up some interest in it. But it did not tell us a single thing—and I have read with care their report—that any ordinarily intelligent man did not know. I am frank about it. There is nothing in that report of any benefit to anybody. Everybody knew that the Mississippi River was a great river and that it ought to be protected and made navigable, and be made navigable for vessels twice the size of the vessels that traverse it now.

Mr. President, I have advocated on this floor for more than twenty years the making of a water canal from Lake Michigan into the Mississippi River, and I took some part in getting a small canal from the Illinois River into the Mississippi River. It was too small to be of any real benefit, but it was the best we could do, hoping that it might be the progenitor of something better, as I have no doubt it will in time. But there has been no such feeling among the people generally.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator whether the Congress of the United States in its action upon the question of improving the waterways of the country for purposes of navigability has met the expectations of the Senator himself? I will ask him further whether it is not possible that the people of the entire country are very much dissatisfied with the inaction, the inertia, the apathy, and the indifference of Congress on this subject, as shown by its lack of appropriate legislation? I know that the Senator has been a foremost advocate of the development of our waterways, but certainly the action of Congress has not kept pace with his desires or with his expectation, and it is possible that the whole country may be dissatisfied with the action of the Congress, as the Senator doubtless is himself.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am not complaining of Congress at all. I did make complaint here some years ago about the system by which we were expending our money, and we changed that system. But, Mr. President, the party that is in power now and has been in power all except eight years since I have been in public life, now over thirty years, is the party that has had the power to provide these waterways if they wanted to do so. Yet the people have year after year supported them and always in their national conventions declared that their conduct had been entirely satisfactory to them up to that time. So I do not believe the Senator from Nevada can bring any proof to show that there is any general rebellion against the lack of attention to waterways.

Mr. President, I am desirous not to take too much time, and I want to skip some of this matter if I can, because I realize that it is supposed we are in the neighborhood of final adjournment. We have the resolutions of the board of directors of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and their principal idea seems to be that we were deforesting the forests; that the timber supply was disappearing; and therefore we ought to have these lands put in a forest reserve. They say:

Whereas the timber resources of this country are being rapidly diminished, owing to unscientific methods of forestry, to the prevalence of forest fires, and to a wasteful use of timber, resulting in a steady increase in the cost of both hard and soft woods, and which may result moreover in the diminution of the natural storage capacity of our streams, an increasing irregularity in the flow, and consequent impairment of the value of our water powers.

Those are the engineers. Then they urge the passage of this bill, or something like it.

A resolution adopted by the National Board of Trade at its meeting in Washington, in 1908, contains the following:

Whereas the continuation and development of foreign trade in manufactured goods depends largely on our ability to produce at the minimum of cost, it is therefore of vital importance that the waterways and water powers of the Southern Appalachian and White Mountain regions, where hundreds of millions of dollars are now invested in manufacturing enterprises, shall be conserved and perpetuated by protecting the forest cover of these regions.

There is not a word, Mr. President, about commerce or shipping.

Now, I have gone over that. I have gone over it for the purpose of showing that the primary object of this measure is not water, but forests, timber, lumber, power, places of resort, not one of which can be claimed to bring it within the purview of the National Government.

Mr. President, I have here a report from the majority of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. The committee seem to be divided somewhat upon the theory upon which they go, but I am going to show what they all, without exception, declared. Only one man said if you can bring it within the provision that it is really and perfectly and honestly for the purpose of preserving the water and increasing the navigability of streams, he thought it might be done. All the others said it could not be done at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator notice that five members of that committee united in this statement?

It is amply apparent from the foregoing statement that Congress has the constitutional power to acquire lands and forest reserves in a State by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, as an aid to navigation, if it be made to appear to Congress that such reserves would materially or substantially aid navigation.

Five members of the committee to which the Senator calls attention united in that statement.

Mr. TELLER. The men who stood for that more than anybody else added the following:

One of the purposes of the Constitution being to preserve and maintain the use of our navigable rivers as aids to commerce, the State and the Federal Government may agree as they deem best to carry out this great purpose. Such an agreement can be expressed in the act of Congress by setting forth therein in detail the particular cessations of jurisdiction by the State that would be required by the United States as a condition precedent to purchasing the reserves, and by also setting forth therein the purpose for which such jurisdiction is required. This purpose should plainly appear to be that of aiding navigation. All other purposes should be eliminated.

Mr. President, you knock the whole bottom out of this case if you eliminate everything except that.

Mr. GALLINGER. But manifestly in the following paragraph they were not quite so emphatic on that point. They clearly state that if it is an aid to navigation it can be done.

Mr. TELLER. The majority of the committee were absolute and unequivocal in declaring that there was no authority on the part of the Government to buy this land.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator understands, I suppose, that the report of the Judiciary Committee in the House was upon the bill that was pending in the House and not upon the bill under discussion here.

Mr. TELLER. It was exactly the same bill, except the slight amendment you had made yesterday, which, in my opinion, cuts no figure in the case at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator would admit, I assume, that if Congress is satisfied that the purchase of the forests will promote the navigability of navigable streams it is a constitutional purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I will not admit anything of the kind.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator admit that it is constitutional to improve the navigability of navigable streams?

Mr. TELLER. I suppose I have voted a hundred times favorably on that proposition. It is begging the question when you say if Congress believes it. Nobody can believe that that is the purpose if he will read this testimony. Nobody can believe it, because of the fact that it has been presented to us for the last five years not as an aid to commerce but simply as a forest reserve and a timber-protecting scheme. You can not change that purpose by suddenly putting in some provision for a purpose that does not exist.

Mr. President, I desire to have this report of the House committee published. That by Mr. JENKINS—

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will request that the entire report be published.

Mr. TELLER. I mean the whole of it, all of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we might well question the propriety of discussing the action of the House on this question under the rules of the Senate, but I will not raise that point.

Mr. TELLER. No; Mr. President, that is not objectionable.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is, under our rules.

Mr. TELLER. It is not, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

Mr. TELLER. This is past. There has been a lapse. Something has been done. Whenever the House of Representatives has completed its action, then it is subject to discussion, as I can show by the authorities, both in England and in the United States. I believe, Mr. President, I have always kept within the rules on these matters, and I believe I know what they are quite as well as anybody else.

But if I can not discuss it, then surely it ought not to be put into the Record. I want to put into the Record everything that was said by the committee unless there is some objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say I have no objection if the Senator puts in the entire report.

Mr. TELLER. There are three reports here and they are all in one pamphlet. I pass it up and I ask that it may go in as an appendix to what I have been saying.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[House of Representatives. Report No. 1514. Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

POWER OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO ACQUIRE LANDS FOR NATIONAL FOREST PURPOSES.

Mr. JENKINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report, to accompany H. Res. No. 365.

The Committee on the Judiciary received from the House the following:

Whereas the President in his message to the Congress at its present session, on December 3, 1907, makes the following recommendation:

"We should acquire in the Appalachian and White Mountain regions all the forest lands that it is possible to acquire for the use of the nation. These lands, because they form a national asset, are as emphatically national as the rivers which they feed, and which flow through so many States before they reach the ocean;" and

Whereas there have been introduced into the House of Representatives bills for the acquirement of national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and the White Mountains, the same being H. R. 10456 and H. R. 10457, which provide as follows:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed, in his discretion, to acquire for national forest purposes, by purchase or gift, lands more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for other purposes, and situated on the watersheds of navigable streams in the Southern Appalachian Mountains within the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and in the White Mountains within the States of New Hampshire and Maine.

"That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the lands to be acquired under this act; but no payment shall be made for any such lands until the title shall be satisfactory to the Attorney-General and shall be vested in the United States.

"That the sum of $5,000,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and said sum shall be available immediately and until expended for said purpose: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall each year make a detailed report to Congress of the lands purchased under this act, and the cost thereof;" Therefore be it

Resolved, That so much of the President's message, above referred to, which relates to the acquisition of lands in the South Appalachian and White Mountains "for the use of the nation" be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, together with the questions involved in the bills referred to, directing the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire for national forest purposes lands in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains, within the States named, with instructions to said committee to report fully at an early date their views as to the power of the Federal Government by legislation to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the lands referred to in said bills, situated in the States mentioned, and to appropriate money therefor, and also what power and authority the Federal Government has by legislation to acquire for the purpose of forest reserves lands within a State wherein the Government of the United States has no public domain, and to make appropriation therefor.

We respectfully report that the committee has obeyed the instructions of the House and had under consideration the aforesaid communication. The instructions are to report the views of the committee as to the power of the Federal Government, by legislation, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the lands referred to, situated in the States mentioned in the preamble, and to appropriate money therefor; and also what power and authority the Federal Government has by legislation to acquire for the purpose of national forest purposes lands within a State wherein the Government of the United States has no public domain, and to make appropriation therefor.

To restate the question, in other words to be gathered from the entire communication, Has Congress the power to enter a State and take from the owner thereof lands for forest purposes more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for other purposes? The committee have been aided in their research by arguments made on behalf of the constitutionality of the measure and also in favor of the unconstitutionality of the same. The committee is not unmindful of the interest taken by many people in this matter, many believing that if Congress has the power and would exercise it, it would be beneficial, but it is purely a question of power. In this matter the committee is limited to answering a constitutional question, which must be gathered from the communication sent by the House to this committee, and can not consider any question of policy. It is said on behalf of the constitutionality of the proposed measure that the object is the regulation of stream flow in navigable rivers, while the instrument sent by the House to this committee says, in part: "To acquire for national forest purposes lands more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for any other purposes."

In order to determine the question, reference will have to be made to the Constitution. It is universally agreed that the Government of the United States is one of limited power; that the power of the United States is to be found in the Constitution of the United States; that the Government of the United States is not only one of limited power, but the powers are enumerated. After stating what powers are conferred on Congress by enumeration, follows a provision for carrying the express powers into effect, authorizing Congress to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the enumerated powers in the Constitution. The construction of this paragraph was very aptly and wisely stated in McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat., 316), by Marshall, Chief Justice, who said:

"But we think the sound construction of the Constitution must allow to the National Legislature that discretion, with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it, in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional."

The express enumerated power so strongly relied upon is the one that confers upon Congress the power to regulate commerce between the States. The question addressed to this committee is much more important than the average person may think. It is very easy for those in favor of a proposition to lose sight of any constitutional question involved. As the nation grows and expands many appeals for relief are made for Federal power by the people, apparently of the belief that the National Government is capable of immense powers of legislation for the general welfare of the people. When the people are not in sympathy with the exercise of Federal power, they are extremely sensitive, and the best and only way is to pursue the pathway so clearly defining the line of demarcation between State and Federal power. There is nothing more dangerous to the peace, prosperity, and perpetuity of this nation than for Congress to execute powers not conferred. The people will always be loyal to the States, and the nation will always be in need of the assistance and support of the people; and the best way to obtain the sympathy and support of the people for the National Government is for the Congress of the United States to keep within the limitations conferred by the Constitution.

It was said by Taney, Chief Justice, in Martin v. Waddell (1842) (16 Pet. (U. S.), 410), that "when the Revolution took place the people of each State became themselves sovereign, and in that character hold the absolute right to all their navigable waters and the soils under them for their own common use, subject only to the rights since surrendered by the Constitution to the General Government."

This language was repeated by McKinley, J., in Pollard v. Hagan (1845) (3 How. (U. S.), 229). The Constitution of the United States confers no power of eminent domain or of legislation over State territory, except that contained in the seventeenth clause, eighth section, first article, relating to the seat of government and places purchased with the consent of the State for forts, magazines, etc. Hence it was said by the court, in the case last cited, that, even if Georgia had in her compact of cession to the United States of the territory of Alabama granted the municipal right of sovereignty and eminent domain, "such stipulation would have been void and inoperative, because the United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain within the limits of a State or elsewhere except in the cases in which it is expressly granted."

Hence it was held in that case that the shores of navigable waters and the soils under them were not granted by the Constitution of the United States, but were reserved to the States, respectively, and that Alabama, though a new State, had after admission the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over the subject as the original States. This was reaffirmed in Gilman v. Philadelphia (1865) (3 Wall. (U. S.), 713).

These authorities invite attention to two important matters bearing on the question, one the extent of ownership by the people and the States of the navigable waters and the soils under them, and the riparian rights of the people and States: All of which are involved, when the United States seeks to acquire lands for forest purposes, and affected by the constitutional question.

The other not constitutional but extremely important, as to whether the States or National Government shall exercise jurisdiction over lands so acquired. The United States can only exercise authority when lands are purchased by the consent of the legislatures of the States, in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, and arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings; therefore, it seems plain that the United States can not, even with the consent of the States, exercise jurisdiction, and if the United States purchases lands as contemplated, the same will forever remain subject to State power.

The National Government can not acquire land for national forest purposes unless that power is conferred upon Congress by the Constitution. Congress can not exercise this right unless it is necessary to accomplish some object within the authority of Congress. A government of limited power can not afford to exercise a power it does not enjoy when the exercise of the power is at the expense of the creator of the government of the limited power. The people created the National Government by adopting the Constitution, giving it limited power only, and defined the powers by enumeration. So jealous were the States of the new sovereign, and so determined to enjoy rights not delegated, that, notwithstanding it was universally conceded by the framers of the new government that no power could be exercised unless conferred by the Constitution, the tenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted:

"Powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

In speaking of this amendment, the Supreme Court of the United States, in Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46), said in part:

"This amendment, which was seemingly adopted with prescience of just such contention as the present, disclosed the widespread fear that the National Government might, under the pressure of a supposed general welfare, attempt to exercise powers which had not been granted. With equal determination the framers intended that no such assumption should ever find justification in the organic act, and that if in the future further powers seemed necessary they should be granted by the people in the manner they had provided for amending that act."

All power is vested in the United States, the several States, or the people of the United States. What power is not enjoyed by the United States is with the States or the people. The States and the people have some constitutional rights, even if there is nothing more involved than some mountainous country and forests of timber of no great commercial value. If the Federal Government lacks the power, and the States give their consent to the legislation, it will not confer power on the United States, as the States can not enlarge the powers of the Federal Government in that way. The National Government can not afford to invade a State and take from the people, in violation of their reserved rights, the navigable waters and the soils under them, and the riparian rights of the people and the States, and private lands or the lands of a State, for any purpose unless the power exists, and if the power exists and is legitimate and within the scope of the Constitution, its exercise can not be questioned by the courts and ought to be acquiesced in by the people; but if the power does not exist, no matter how necessary, proper, and beneficial to the people, its exercise can and in time will be questioned, and the people will lose confidence in the National Government if attempts are made to violate their rights and exercise powers not conferred by the Constitution.

The National Government can never be maintained and perpetuated unless it keeps within its just powers. An unwarranted exercise of power when not conferred by the Constitution may be overlooked when necessary to save the life of the nation. It will never be overlooked or forgotten if there be unwarranted Federal action or the rights of the people or the States are involved, even if the occasion and demand is great. It may look like a small and unimportant matter and meet the approval of public opinion for the Federal Government to invade a State and condemn lands for forest purposes. But if the power is lacking the principle is great, and it is the duty of Congress to jealously guard the rights of the States and not attempt to exercise powers not conferred. There is no dispute but what the National Government has authority to take land by right of eminent domain whenever the use of the land is necessary in furtherance of the execution of any power given the National Government by the Constitution.

No one questions but what the United States can acquire lands for military purposes; for the erection of public buildings, such as post-offices and court-houses; in the interest of coast survey; for the purpose of erecting light-houses, under the powers conferred by the Constitution. But in each such case the controlling question is as to whether or not the use to which the land is to be put is a public one. That is, in other words, the power to act must be found in the Constitution, and after the power is ascertained it must be found that the use is public. It is unnecessary to determine whether the use is public when the power is wanting. In other words, as more directly applicable to this matter, Congress having power to regulate commerce between the States has an unquestioned right to improve navigable streams, and may, for that purpose and to that end, take land whenever in the judgment of Congress it is necessary to the proper exercise of that power. But an entirely different question is presented when the United States attempts to acquire forest lands because it is claimed by some, not by all, that it will cause it to rain and thereby increase the flow of the stream. If the use of the land is to assist in the execution of some power of government a different question is presented.

The important question arises: Has the National Government the power under the Constitution to acquire lands for the purpose of national forestry purposes, according to the words of the resolution? If so, unquestionably Congress has power to make all laws necessary and proper to carry that power into execution. There is no difference as far as the question herein is concerned between the right to purchase and the right to condemn. For the purpose of answering the House, the acquisition by purchase and condemnation may be treated together, and acquisition by the words "or otherwise" may be treated as including gifts or excluded as immaterial. A careful reading of all the enumerated powers contained in the Constitution fails to disclose any authority on the part of Congress to acquire lands in a State by condemnation or purchase for national forestry purposes. Not that express power to acquire lands for national forestry purposes must be found in the Constitution in so many words among the enumerated powers, but an express power must be first found that can be executed by the acquisition of lands for forestry purposes. The express power is placed in the Constitution to authorize Congress to act. Then the question arises: Is the proposed act to acquire lands within the meaning of the Constitution necessary and proper to carry the express power into execution?

Marshall, Chief Justice, has told Congress how legislation can be constitutional within that power. Congress must have discretion to exercise the power in a manner most beneficial to the people. The end must be legitimate and within the scope of the Constitution, then all appropriate means plainly adapted to that end, not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional. As illustrated, by the power given Congress "to raise and support armies." It is supposed that Congress will exercise the power most beneficial to the people as to the size of the Army, pay of the Army, and how cared for, etc. And all power of Congress to provide for the particular thing named is not to be found in express words in the Constitution. The same might be said of the familiar power to establish post-offices and post-roads that will secure transportation and delivery of the mails, and appropriate buildings. As applied to the matter before the committee, unless an aid and betterment of navigation, it is clearly unconstitutional.

Then the further question arises: Is the acquisition of lands for forest reserves a necessary and proper act to carry into execution the power to regulate commerce? Still further: Is Congress exercising a constitutional discretion most beneficial to the people when it seeks to acquire mountains and forests, unless it appears the best, cheapest, and most legitimate means to control the flow of streams and improvement of navigation? An express power must be found in the Constitution. It was impossible for the Constitution to call by name or state all Congress could do. For to mention any specific act under any one express power would exclude things not mentioned and limit unnecessarily the power of Congress; therefore much is left to the wise and just discretion of Congress in legislating pursuant to the express power granted. And the limitation of that power, so aptly stated by Marshall, Chief Justice, can not be improved upon. But it is plain to be seen that legislation pursuant to an express power is subject to the limitations cited.

Would it be constitutional for Congress in the exercise of its discretion to buy a site for a small public building, to condemn 40 acres of land and interfere with as many people when 1 acre of land would be sufficient? When an express power is found that will justify legislation to carry that power into execution, it is still subject to constitutional limitations. Is the power sought to be exercised by Congress fairly deducible from the express power granted? Is the power to acquire land for forestry purposes fairly deducible from the power to regulate commerce? Would it be an honest exercise of discretion for the manifest interests of the people? This feature must be closely scanned or everything popular and demanded by the people will soon be considered constitutional, and constitutional law will soon be a thing of the past.

A careful reading of the resolution discloses that the object sought is not the regulation of commerce; that the object of the acquisition of land is for national forest purposes, though incidentally it may be an aid to commerce. And it has been suggested that the United States v. Gettysburg Electric Railway Company (160 U. S., 668), decided in 1896, is authority for the constitutionality of the proposed measure. In that case the United States sought to condemn lands for the purpose of preserving the lines of battle at Gettysburg, Pa., and for marking with tablets the position occupied by the various commands of the armies of the Potomac and of northern Virginia on that field. The Supreme Court held that the right of condemnation existed; that the power to acquire and condemn existed, having been conferred by the Constitution, and that the use to which the lands were to be put was a public one. The Constitution gives Congress the power to declare war; to raise and support armies; to provide and maintain a navy. It was held by the court that the end to be attained was within that power. The facts brought the case within the doctrine of Marshall, Chief Justice, and the court in part said:

"That the battle of Gettysburg was one of the great battles of the world. The numbers contained in the opposing armies were great; the sacrifice of life was dreadful, while the bravery and, indeed, heroism displayed by both the contending forces ranked with the highest exhibition of those qualities ever made by man. The importance of the issue involved in the contest of which this great battle was a part can not be overestimated. The existence of the Government itself and the perpetuity of our institutions depended upon the result. Valuable lessons in the art of war can now be learned from the examination of this great battlefield in connection with the history of the events which there took place. Can it be that the Government is without power to preserve the land and properly mark out the various sites upon which this struggle took place? Can it not erect monuments provided for by those acts of Congress or even take possession of the field of battle in the name and for the benefit of all the citizens of the country for the present and for the future? Such a use seems necessarily not only a public use, but one so closely connected with the welfare of the Republic itself as to be within the powers granted Congress by the Constitution for the purpose of protecting and preserving the whole country."

This case certainly must be regarded as an extreme application of the doctrine of Marshall, Chief Justice. If there is any doubt in the mind of any person after reading the Constitution, that doubt will be readily dispelled by the foregoing doubtful case and the further case of Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46). The United States intervened. From the statement of the case it appears that the United States was seeking to reclaim about 60,000,000 acres of land belonging to the United States within the arid region, and in the opinion of the court, speaking of the claim of the United States, it is said, on page 86:

"It rears its petition of intervention upon its alleged duty of legislating for the reclamation of arid lands."

And on page 87 the court further says:

"Turning to the enumeration of the powers granted to Congress by the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, it is enough to say that no one of them by any implication refers to the reclamation of arid lands."

Section 8 contains the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, yet the court says, on page 88:

"We must look beyond section 8 for Congressional authority over arid lands."

And on page 91 the court further says:

"But, as our national territory has been enlarged, we have within our borders extensive tracts of arid lands which ought to be reclaimed, and it may well be that no power is adequate for their reclamation other than that of the National Government. But if no such power has been granted none can be exercised."

And the court reached the conclusion that the United States under the Constitution could not for want of power reclaim arid lands under the commerce clause of the Constitution or any other express power. There is practically no difference between reclaiming arid lands for agricultural purposes and acquiring lands for forestry purposes. The facts in the case, the conclusions reached by the court, and the views of those insisting upon the constitutionality of the proposed legislation can profitably be restated by an extract taken from an argument made and brief filed on behalf of the constitutionality of the proposed measure:

"The United States of America filed its petition of intervention, and alleged that within the watershed of the Arkansas River are 1,000,000 acres of public lands, uninhabitable and unsalable unless rendered so by the impounding of waters in this watershed to reclaim this land, that legislation of Congress has sanctioned the use of these waters in this arid region, and that under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, $1,000,000 have been expended in procuring sites for reservoirs and dams."

This contention brought directly to the court the question whether the amount of the flow of the waters of the Arkansas River is subject to the authority and control of the United States. The United States claimed that in and near the river, as it runs through Kansas and Colorado, are large tracts of arid lands; that the National Government itself is the owner of many thousands of acres, and that it has the right to make such legislative provision as in its judgment is needed for the reclamation of all these arid lands and for that purpose to appropriate the accessible waters."

"This claim, says the Supreme Court, involves the question whether the reclamation of arid lands is one of the powers granted to the General Government. Certainly it is not, for in the enumeration of the powers granted to Congress by the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution we can not find one which by any implication refers to the reclamation of arid lands."

"That clause only decides that the reclamation of arid lands is not one of the powers granted to the General Government, and it was not claimed to be a means by which an express power was to be carried into execution."

A concession that the reclamation of arid lands is not within any power of Congress.

Assuming and conceding that Congress has plenary power over all navigable streams under the commerce clause of the Constitution, the important question is, Is the pending measure needed to improve navigation? Would it be the consensus of opinion on the part of a large number of men, competent to speak upon the subject, that the acquisition of lands for forestry purposes is needed within the constitutional discretion of Congress to improve navigation? The power simply includes the ordinary means of executing the power with reference to the power and dignity of the nation, the rights of the States and of the people, the object, purpose, and end sought without attempt to exercise powers not conferred. If not expressed, is it properly incident to an express power necessary to its execution? But it is argued that the end sought is the control of stream flow to improve navigation. No one questions the right and power of Congress, under its power to regulate commerce between the States, to make all laws necessary and proper to carry that power into execution, which will include the improvement of navigation. Unquestionably Congress has the power to improve navigation under its power to regulate commerce, for commerce includes navigation and intercourse, transportation by water as well as by land, and control of all accessible waters. The main proposition is to acquire lands for forestry purposes—just how that will regulate stream flow or improve navigation is, for the present, rather speculative.

It is very clear that the only end sought is the retention and preservation of forests—that is, an increase of the flow of the stream—and improvement of navigation is not the end sought, not the principal matter. Unquestionably Congress has power to increase the flow of streams and improve navigation under its power to regulate commerce. Hence it is argued that the retention and preservation of forests will increase the flow of streams and improve navigation so as to invoke the commerce clause of the Constitution, and, under that power, acquire lands for forestry purposes without any reference to the effect upon the flow of streams or improvement of navigation. If the end sought is the increase of the flow of streams and improvement of navigation, and that is the principal matter, why not apply to Congress for the improvement of the rivers involved; and, if Congress in its wisdom decides upon the improvement, no person will risk his reputation by insisting that it is necessary and proper to acquire the mountains and forests involved in order to improve the navigation.

What is the primary question? In common fairness it must be said, the acquisition of lands for forestry purposes, and that the improvement of navigation is but an incidental matter. This is not said to beg the question but to better develop the constitutional question involved. Does any person believe for a moment that if a proposition was made to Congress to appropriate $5,000,000 for the improvement of the navigation of the rivers involved it would command one vote? Has it not been determined by Congress at the present time not to make any appropriation for the improvements of rivers and harbors this year? It is a very important question and should be rightly determined. We should not enter upon such an unknown sea of difficulties, unless the power is clear, for no one can tell when this expenditure of public money will end.

The United States is the moving party, not the States. That is, the States are not taking any action whatever against the United States; are not interfering with the flow of any stream or assuming any right or control over navigation or commerce. On the contrary, it is the United States asserting the right to enter States and take by purchase, gift, or condemnation lands for national forestry purposes. The interested States may be willing, the people of these States may be willing, that Congress should in this manner exceed its powers for their benefit, but this does not justify unconstitutional action upon the part of Congress, and will sooner or later be cited as a precedent—as a usurpation of power on the part of Congress.

The lands to be selected may be more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for any other purpose and yet might not be an aid to navigation or even increase the flow of the stream, and not be valuable for either. How will the transfer of the title to these mountains and forests to the United States increase the flow of the stream or improve navigation? The argument on behalf of the measure seems to establish several propositions: That the reclamation of the forests is a public one for the benefit of the people; that the removal of the forests permits the rainfall to run at once over the land into the streams and soon disappear; that the retention of the forests increases the quantity of leaves and other vegetable matter, so that the rainfall percolates into the ground. It must be conceded that the flow of the stream depends upon the quantity of rainfall and its velocity. Good sense discloses that in times of great and continuous drought it takes an immense amount of rain to affect the flow of a stream. If rain falls slowly, it percolates into the ground—swamp and low places—and not until the ground is well soaked is there an appreciable effect upon stream flow.

No person will want to risk his reputation by saying that commerce by water transportation can be successfully carried on by means of rainfall, or that the acquisition of lands by the United States will increase rainfall or improve navigation. When there are large quantities of snow passing away and rainfalls producing floods, the flow of the stream will necessarily be increased, but practically as soon as the flood ceases the stream flow will recede to normal depths, and the water in the ground can not be depended upon to provide for navigation. In order to follow and accurately determine the matter, the nature of the transaction must be considered. It is either to acquire lands for forestry purposes, or to improve navigation of streams. If the former, it can not be done, for there is no express power. If the latter, it can not be done under the construction given by Marshall, Chief Justice. For to purchase mountains and forests to improve navigation would not be exercising a discretion most beneficial to the people. The end would not be legitimate; not within the scope of the Constitution; it would not be an appropriate means adapted to that end, and would not consist with the letter or spirit of the Constitution.

In Kansas v. Colorado the Supreme Court of the United States denied the right of the United States to reclaim arid lands, while the case concedes it would be a great public benefit and have a tendency to improve navigation. It is not a question of strict construction of the Constitution on the one hand and of a broad and liberal construction on the other, but an ascertainment of the line of demarcation between State and Federal power, with justice to both.

Where in the Constitution is to be found the power in the National Government to reclaim its own arid lands or to acquire arid lands for the purpose of reclamation? Nowhere, not even under the power to regulate commerce. When the reclaimed lands will likely increase the rainfall, thereby increasing the flow of the stream, answers the Supreme Court in Kansas v. Colorado. Where in the Constitution is to be found any power in the National Government to acquire lands for national forestry purposes? Nowhere, answers the Constitution and the Supreme Court of the United States in Kansas v. Colorado, for the case in Kansas v. Colorado and the question before your committee are absolutely identical.

The action of Congress to be constitutional must depend upon the powers enumerated in the Constitution. To justify action one at least of the enumerated powers must expressly provide for the legislation, or it must be justified by that power in the constitutional manner indicated, as in case of power to declare war. Here is an express power, and Congress can for any reason make a declaration of war against any nation, and its action can not be questioned by the courts. But having declared war many questions may arise as to necessary and proper action to make the declaration of war effective, and this must be determined by construction, as to its being necessary and proper; whether an appropriate means to carry the war power into execution in a manner most beneficial to the people. Is the end legitimate and within the scope of the Constitution? For these matters are not expressly provided for—such as the size of the Army, how raised, by enlistment or draft; as to discipline; whether regulars or volunteers; as to the arm of service, the term of service. All of this and many more show what legislation is a necessary and proper execution of the power.

The doctrine as to what can be done pursuant to an express power so as to make it operative and effective presents a most interesting question in our constitutional history. There is great danger of the powerful influence of two extremes, one for anything within the will of Congress, the other to so limit power as to prevent legislation when wise, necessary, and constitutional. We should in the interest of the people avoid both extremes. Congress should never shrink from exercising all of its full power, when beneficial to the people, and always be careful to avoid an unconstitutional exercise of power. The constitutionality of the proposed measure is worthy of careful consideration for the effect of the proposed legislation upon the future of the nation.

If Congress has power to acquire the lands in question, there is nothing to prevent the national power from acquiring any and all lands of a State and all the worthless lands of all the States the people desire to sell, and it will increase friction between the State and Federal Government over the question of jurisdiction. Forests and worthless lands will be for sale all over the nation, and the power of the States will be subordinate to the desire of the people to unload on the nation lands that the poorest emigrants will not locate upon. So we agree that the power to regulate commerce is expressly provided for, and according to the broad definition given that term by the courts and the commercial world much can be constitutionally done, and the growing wants of the people will call for full exercise of all the power Congress enjoys. But this will not justify Congress assuming the reclamation of forests under the remote and speculative claim that it will improve navigation.

It does not change the constitutional aspect, because the lands can be purchased by agreement with the owners; but if the power is exercised and the owners refuse to sell they will have to submit to the land being taken from them, and this raises a very important question—whether the Government would be discharging its constitutional duty in taking from private owners their property. Even assuming that the Government can go and take property, it certainly must be absolutely needed for the use of the Government, for, as the Supreme Court of the United States said in Van Brocklin and Another v. State of Tennessee and Others, 117 U. S., 151, page 158:

"The United States did not and can not hold property, as a monarch may, for private or personal purposes. All the property and revenues of the United States must be held and applied, as all taxes, duties, imposts, and excises must be laid and collected, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

It does not satisfy the Constitution that it would be beneficial to the people or popular with them, or that the Government can use the same, or that the Government needs it. The power to acquire it must first be ascertained independent of all these considerations, and then if the power is ascertained, the question arises as to whether or not the end is legitimate, whether it is fairly and honestly exercised in a manner beneficial to the people. It must absolutely be needed for the use of the Government, in the furtherance of some one of the enumerated powers.

It can not be doubted that the original idea is the acquisition of lands for forestry purposes. This is easily ascertained from what has been said in various ways in advocacy of the measure. The improvement of navigation to those supporting the proposition is a matter of secondary, if of any importance, suggested so as to bring it under the commerce clause.

There is another feature of the case to be considered, tending to show that the primary object is the acquisition of lands for forest purposes, and not for the improvement of navigation. Congress will not be following constitutional lines if it attempts, under the circumstances of the case, to improve navigation by acquiring lands, for Congress has no constitutional authority to act when there is no commerce. That is, it would be exceeding its power, within the definition of Marshall, C. J.

Every person interested knows that Congress does not intend by the purchase or by the acquisition of the lands to take any steps affirmatively toward the improvement of the rivers affected; that the improvement of navigation will go on just the same with or without the acquisition of the lands, and the talk of improvement of navigation and the regulation of commerce is to secure the lands for forest purposes, without reference to the effect upon navigation or commerce. It is a matter of common knowledge that the purchase of the lands will not bring commerce; that the increase of the flow of streams is not called for in the interest of commerce; that many of the streams have never been used and can not be made navigable as instrumentalities of commerce.

In other words, the demand for the acquisition of the lands is not in the interest of either navigation or commerce. It is well known that many acres of the land sought for forest purposes will not be needed or considered in connection with either navigation or commerce, as under any theory can not be made very favorable for either. As showing at least how necessary it is that the question be thoroughly examined and carefully understood several of the earnest advocates of the measure insist that it is not necessary to take the land. The same object can be accomplished by the Federal Government preventing the cutting of the timber, and thereby improve navigation. It is too plain for discussion that the sole purpose and object is the acquisition of lands for forest purposes; that the thought of improving navigation or regulating commerce is not to be seriously considered; that the purchase of the lands will not improve navigation; that there is no commerce to be subserved. It is a well-known fact that much of the land in question is so remote that, while it would be considered a part of the forest reserve, it could under no circumstances be considered valuable for increase of the flow of streams or for the purposes of navigation. So the whole proposition must be considered as an acquisition of lands for forest purposes.

It does not require any evidence of the situation outside of the record for Congress to act correctly. That is, the communication sent to the committee by the House is full enough. Congress can not shirk its constitutional duty, for the proposition is plainly and sufficiently presented to Congress. Can Congress acquire lands for forest reserves? Can Congress acquire lands for forest purposes because of the increase of the flow of the stream and consequent regulation of commerce?

If this can be constitutionally done, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, the doors will be opened wide enough to dispense with all State power and rights and do anything that is popular with the people or quite generally demanded. If the constitutionality of the measure is to be determined by the amount of an appropriation, we shall have no guide for future action except the amount of money involved. Some of the States of the Union have been very sensitive about excessive Federal power, but raise no voice against its exercise when the benefits accrue to them. Forever hereafter they should hold their peace.

Restating the proposition briefly: Congress has express power to regulate commerce between the States; but a great question presents itself when it is asked what can be done under and pursuant to that power. The Constitution says Congress shall have power to make all laws necessary and proper to carry that power into execution. The fact that Congress has express power to make all laws necessary and proper to carry the enumerated powers into execution does not enlarge the power of Congress, for without it, unquestionably, Congress can do the same thing—that is, exercise all powers to the same extent as now. Still, we have but a limited idea as to what can be done, even when we keep in mind the rule laid down by Marshall, C. J., and carefully consider the many things the Supreme Court has said Congress has power to do. The great growth of the nation in population, business, and commerce, makes many demands upon Congress for legislation under that power, and no narrow construction should be adopted that will prevent proper Congressional action. No statement can be made that will include all Congress can do under that power. The boundaries can not be marked or limits to its exercise of legislative power prescribed.

The framework of the Constitution shows how thoroughly the fathers understood what they were doing. The best way to reach a correct conclusion is to consider what is proposed, what is the matter sought to be done, the end contemplated. With that ascertained, the question is, Can it be constitutionally accomplished within the construction stated by Marshall, C. J., the proposition being for Congress "to acquire for national forest purposes lands more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for any other purpose, does it under what power, we ask? The answer is, the power to regulate commerce. Assuming the fact to be that the land is more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for any other purpose, does it prove, within the meaning of the Constitution, that its purchase will improve navigation?

We fully appreciate the width and depth of the power that must be ascertained by construction, and readily concede that the power is so great that Congress has the right to improve navigable streams, and for that purpose may take lands. But are we, when we acquire lands for national forest purposes, regulating commerce or improving navigable streams? If we acquire all of the lands in the United States for national forest purposes, will it improve navigable streams or in any manner operate as a regulation of commerce? Assuming that under its power to regulate commerce Congress has power to improve navigable streams, would anyone say Congress was exercising that discretion with respect to the means employed, most beneficial to the people, when, in attempting to improve the navigation of streams, it acquires for national forest purposes lands more valuable for stream flow than for any other purposes?

It does not change the constitutional character of the matter when the selection is limited to lands more valuable for stream flow than for any other purposes. That is, the fact that it is so valuable, will not make it constitutional to take the lands for national forest purposes. Is the taking of lands for national forest purposes a substantial and practical way of improving navigation? Would the end be legitimate? Would the means employed be appropriate and plainly adapted to that end? How much will navigable streams be improved by the United States purchasing lands for national forest purposes, even if more valuable for stream flow than for any other purposes? Has Congress exercised that discretion with respect to the means employed in the manner most beneficial to the people when it undertakes to improve navigable streams by acquiring lands for forest purposes more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for any other purpose? Could it fairly be said that by so doing Congress has kept itself within the scope of the Constitution? Are these means that can be employed under the Constitution, or would the same be employed even as a business proposition?

If the purchase of the lands will not improve navigable streams, notwithstanding the same are taken for national forest purposes, it is not constitutional. There is no constitutional means for the United States to acquire lands unless it is necessary and proper to carry into execution some one of the enumerated express powers of government, and then strictly within the construction given by Marshall, C. J. Can it be said that the United States can enter any State and acquire lands for public parks? If not, the United States can not enter a State and take lands for forest purposes.

If the primary purpose is to improve navigation, Congress can declare to what extent the improvement shall be made, and, having exercised its discretion, the courts can not go behind it. But when Congress continues the exercise of its powers, improving navigation to the extent of declaring that there shall be taken for national forest purposes lands more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for any other purpose, this discretion can be questioned in the courts. At the outset, therefore, it becomes the duty of Congress to consider whether such action is constitutional; whether this high duty assigned to it is being executed in a manner most beneficial to the people; whether the acquisition of the land is legitimate. Is it an honest, fair, and constitutional exercise of power? Is the acquisition of the lands necessary for the improvement of navigation?

As suggested in Kansas v. Colorado, if this is necessary for the welfare of the people, let us amend the Constitution, but do not violate great principles of constitutional law under the guise of regulating commerce. The power of Congress is ample to satisfy the wants of the people, as far as regulating commerce is concerned, but not broad enough to acquire lands for forestry purposes.

In answer to the foregoing resolution of inquiry, the committee submit the following:

Resolved, That the committee is of the opinion that the Federal Government has no power to acquire lands within a State solely for forest reserves; but under its constitutional power over navigation the Federal Government may appropriate for the purchase of lands and forest reserves in a State, provided it is made clearly to appear that such lands and forest reserves have a direct and substantial connection with the conservation and improvement of the navigability of a river actually navigable in whole or in part, and that any appropriation made therefor is limited to that purpose.

Resolved, That the bills referred to in the resolutions of the House (H. R. 10456 and H. R. 10457) are not confined to such last-mentioned purpose and are therefore unconstitutional.

I concur in the foregoing views of Mr. JENKINS and I dissent from that portion of the resolution adopted by the committee reading as follows:

"But under its constitutional power over navigation the Federal Government may appropriate for the purchase of lands and forest reserves in a State, provided it is made clearly to appear that such lands and forest reserves have a direct and substantial connection with the conservation and improvement of the navigability of a river actually navigable in whole or in part."

GEORGE R. MALBY.

VIEWS OF RICHARD WAYNE PARKER.

The resolution adopted by the committee is as follows:

Resolved, That the committee is of the opinion that the Federal Government has no power to acquire lands within a State solely for forest reserves; but under its constitutional power over navigation the Federal Government may appropriate for the purchase of lands and forest reserves in a State, provided it is made clearly to appear that such lands and forest reserves have a direct and substantial connection with the conservation and improvement of the navigability of a river actually navigable in whole or in part, and that any appropriation made therefor is limited to that purpose.

Resolved, That the bills referred to in the resolutions of the House (H. R. 10456 and H. R. 10457) are not confined to such last-mentioned purpose and are therefore unconstitutional.

I agree with the resolution adopted by the committee that the bills submitted are unconstitutional, that the important duty of establishing and maintaining forest reserves within each State is for that State, and that the United States has no interest even in the flow of streams, except for the regulation of commerce, including the maintenance, improvement, and construction of navigable channels, whether natural or artificial, which may be used in interstate and foreign commerce; but I find myself unable to agree that in the interests of navigation the United States can purchase and control thousands of square miles of dry land and take that land out of the control and taxable jurisdiction of the several States. It is not to my mind at all clear that such power was given by the Constitution or can be included within the power to regulate commerce; nor is it at all clear that any State legislature has the right to convey away part of the State for purposes not within the United States Constitution and to bar all future legislatures and the people of the State from the benefits resulting from improvement and taxation of those lands.

No one can exaggerate the importance of the establishment and maintenance of forest reserves, especially upon the headwaters of our various rivers. Their necessity is being realized by all the States. In New York and New Jersey the mountain area is fast being segregated for the water supply of great cities. The roots of the monarchs of the forest hold back rainfall, regulate and even the flow of streams, moderate freshets, protect the slopes from wash and waste and the river bottoms and channels from deposits of sand and gravel, and preserve a flow for the dry season. Forests even seem to temper the climate, and they constantly lay by stores of lumber that is becoming more and more valuable every day. These are great public considerations, but, like many other public matters, they seem to belong to the several States. It is true that, directly or indirectly, floods and freshets from the headwaters will affect the channel and navigation of a stream and may have to be provided against. Such provision by engineering works on the streams, as by dams, ponds, etc., is certainly within the power of the United States, whose rights over navigable channels used in interstate and foreign commerce are paramount for the construction, improvement, and maintenance of such channels.

There seems, however, to be a recognized legal distinction between rights in the stream and rights on the land whose surface sheds the rainfall into that stream. We may note examples.

No action lies by any person against his neighbor for flow of surface water.

No action lies for changes in the amount or character of stream flow by ordinary use of the land higher up, such as clearing, tillage, etc., even if the stream be muddied so as, for instance, to damage a paper mill. These principles are established in a host of cases, wherein it was held that every man's right is subject to the right of his neighbor to use his own property in the ordinary way. In like manner it may well be held that the rights of the United States in the waters are subject to the rights of the people of the various States to use the dry land in ordinary ways, as they may deem proper, and that a grant of power to construct navigable waterways may not be used to divest them of that land except so far as it is necessary to engineering work connected with such waterways. By the act of April 28, 1888 (25 Stat. L. 94), any land may be acquired needed to maintain, operate, or prosecute work for the improvement of rivers and harbors for which provision has been made by law. This statute is quoted in Mr. BRANTLEY's views, page 30, and seems to cover the entire jurisdiction of the United States. If it be true that headwater forests are land that is so needed, the claim can be made under this statute in court. To my mind it is certainly doubtful, and I can not concur in the opinion of the committee on this point.

It seems still more a question whether any State can be divested by the legislature of its control over its territory. The importance of mountain land to every State is growing day by day if only for aqueducts. The State holds the rainfall and streams as a sacred trust for its own citizens, whose life depends upon a daily supply of water. This principle has just been laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of the State of New Jersey against the Hudson County Water Company. It can never be foreseen what value may lie in territory which the State is asked to grant away and put out of the march of improvement.

For these reasons I am unable to concur in so much of the resolution adopted by the committee as declares the power of the United States to acquire forests within the States in aid of navigation. The question is at least doubtful.

To restate the matter briefly:

The United States have no interest in the rivers, except for purposes of navigation, and it may fairly be said that the rivers of the Atlantic slope are not navigable above the tidal flow.

It is very hard to see how buying the whole surface of the ground is a question of navigation. There has to be some distinction between land and water. Of course the building of banks and dams, the dredging or digging of the bottom, new channels, or even dams for water supply to a canal are all matters which require the purchase of land, but this is for works on the stream. It is going beyond anything which has ever been hinted to suggest that because the water that falls from the skies runs off the surface into navigable streams that therefore this surface becomes a mere incident of navigation. The United States is a Government of limited powers. In this particular respect it stands in precisely the same position as if it had been authorized by the State to control, maintain, improve, and build navigable waterways anywhere within the State. If these powers were given to a corporation, together with the great governmental power of eminent domain, it could take whatever land should be found necessary for channels or works of navigation, including dams, ponds, feeders, banks, new channels, or cut-offs, but such a company would certainly not have the power to condemn and take dry ground not needed for these works on the theory that the rainfall ran off this ground into their canals. Such a power would mean that they could shut up whole sections of that State against settlement, improvements, and increased taxable value. Such powers would not be implied in such a grant, nor should they be implied in the grant to the United States by the Constitution.

It is truly said that clearing the ground increases freshets and encourages the formation of bars to the injury of navigation. Tillage does the same, perhaps to a greater extent. So does building a city, paving streets, roofing the houses, and all the devices by which we turn the whole rainfall into the streams as soon as engineering can send it there. The influence upon navigation in these cases is "direct and substantial," but it can hardly be asserted that therefore the United States could acquire the farm or the city, although the committee resolution holds that the Federal Government may appropriate "for the purchase of lands . . . in a State, provided it is made clearly to appear that such lands have a direct and substantial connection with the maintenance and improvement of the navigability of a river actually navigable in whole or in part." It has been held that the United States can have no title in docks, wharves, and piers, or in the soil under the river, except for engineering works to aid navigation. The same principle applies, and "control stops with the shore."

RICHARD WAYNE PARKER.

VIEWS OF MESSRS. LITTLEFIELD, DIEKEMA, AND BANNON.

No money can be constitutionally appropriated from the Federal Treasury except for the accomplishment of a Federal purpose, the proper discharge or exercise of a Federal function. It has long been settled that the Federal Government is a Government of granted, enumerated powers, under which only such undefined powers can be exercised as are "appropriate and plainly adapted" to the effective practical exercise of the granted, enumerated powers. (Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S., 88.)

When a project is suggested as the subject-matter of a Federal appropriation the only question to be determined is, Does the project come fairly within the scope of these granted, enumerated powers or the undefined powers "appropriate and plainly adapted to" their effective practical exercise. If it does not, then the Federal Government has no constitutional power to appropriate the public money to accomplish such a purpose. The mere size of a project, the fact that it involves immense values, affects millions of people, is distributed throughout the whole geographical area of the United States, lending the unintelligent and uninformed for those reasons to describe it as national, does not even remotely tend to establish the fact that it is included within any granted enumerated power or an undefined power "appropriate and plainly adapted to" its effective and practical exercise.

Bigness no doubt appeals to the imagination and engenders desire for Federal control, but this consideration has no place in determining a result which depends upon the exercise of the reasoning faculties. The fact that the project is large or small, unimportant or important, does not reach the threshold of the discussion in determining whether it is included in a granted power. Nor is it a question as to whether certain powers could be more advantageously and effectively exercised by the Federal Government, and therefore ought to have been granted. It is not a question as to what ought or might have been granted; the only question is what is the power that was granted. It is claimed, and it is true, that the preservation of the forests by the application of scientific methods of conservation is essential to the maintenance of an adequate supply of timber, lumber, and fuel, etc., and means the preservation of natural resources of almost incalculable value. It is also claimed, and we think correctly, that the preservation of the forests is of very great importance in the development, maintenance, and conservation of water powers along the streams that have their rise in the watersheds covered by these forests. Our attention has not been called to, and we have not been able to find, any power granted to the Federal Government to which, either directly or by reasonable implication or necessary inference, either of these purposes may with any propriety be referred.

Moreover, it seems clear that the Government can only constitutionally acquire property for a constitutional Federal purpose, which clearly constitutes a public use, and therefore what it can constitutionally acquire by purchase it also has the right to acquire by the exercise of eminent domain. Certainly eminent domain can not be exercised except for a public use. Measured by this standard the purpose disclosed in the bills referred to in the resolution (H. R. 10458, H. R. 10457—they are identical in terms) is clearly not a Federal purpose and would not justify any appropriation. The purpose upon which they are predicated is, section 1, "To acquire for national forest purposes," and in section 3, "Shall have consented to the acquisition of such land by the United States for national forest purposes." We are unable to find, and our attention has not been called to, any grant of power to the Federal Government which includes, even indirectly, these purposes. (206 U. S., 46.) It is, however, claimed that although these bills do not proceed upon that hypothesis, that the appropriation can be justified on the ground of the relation of the forests on the watershed, to the navigability of the streams that have their sources in such watersheds.

It is said that the deforesting of the watersheds precipitates into the streams soil and silt that is carried downstream until it accumulates in such quantities as to substantially obstruct navigation, and make it necessary to remove such obstruction in order to preserve their navigability; and that the watershed when properly covered with forest retains the rainfall, so that it is gradually distributed throughout the year, and thus increases the flow in navigable portions of the river, so as to preserve their navigability, when otherwise they would be unnavigable during the dry portions of the year, and that for the purpose of thus protecting and preserving the navigability of the navigable portions of the river Congress can make these appropriations for the acquisition and control of the forests on the watersheds. The control of the navigable waters of the United States has been recognized as within the Federal jurisdiction and subject to all necessary appropriate legislation in a long line of decisions from (not to go farther back) Gilman v. Philadelphia (3 Wall., 724), in which the court said:

"Commerce includes navigation. The power to regulate commerce comprehends the control for that purpose, and to the extent necessary of all the navigable rivers of the United States which are accessible from a State other than those in which they lie. For this purpose they are the public property of the nation and subject to all the requisite legislation by Congress. This necessarily includes the power to keep these open and free from any obstruction to their navigation interposed by the States or otherwise, to remove such obstructions where they exist, and to provide, by such sanctions as they deem proper, against the occurrence of the evil and for the punishment of the offenders."

to Kansas v. Colorado (supra), where the court denied the petition of the United States to intervene to protect its alleged interests in the irrigation of arid lands, holding that the United States had no constitutional power to provide for the irrigation of lands other than its own, the court expressly stating that such denial was "without prejudice to the rights of the United States to take such action as it shall deem necessary to preserve or improve the navigability of the Arkansas River." (117.)

The power of the Federal Government to remove obstructions from navigable rivers, either by dredging, removal of rocks and ledges, and compelling necessary changes in the construction of bridges, is repeatedly exercised and universally conceded. That the exercise of this power is not confined to the portion of the stream that is within the navigable limits, but extends to obstructions in existence or contemplated, above the point of navigability, is settled by the case of United States v. Rio Grande Irrigation Company. (174 U. S., 690.) This was a case where the United States, by the Attorney-General, filed a bill in equity to restrain the defendants from constructing a dam across the Rio Grande River in the Territory of New Mexico, and it was conceded that the Rio Grande River in the limits of New Mexico was not navigable.

The court below denied the prayer and dismissed the bill, and this decision was reversed and the case sent back, with instructions to the court below "to order an inquiry into the question as to whether the intended acts of the defendants in the construction of a dam and in appropriating the waters of the Rio Grande will substantially diminish the navigability of that stream within the limits of present navigability; and if so, to issue a decree restraining these acts to the extent that they will so diminish."

In the course of the opinion by Mr. Justice Brewer (which was unanimous) the court, after referring to the fact that the city of New York had appropriated the waters of the Croton River, a nonnavigable river and a tributary of the Hudson River, and stating that it could do so without question "unless thereby the navigability of the Hudson should be disturbed," used as a significant illustration of the power of Congress the following language: "On the other hand, if the State of New York should, even at a place above the limits of navigability, by appropriation for any domestic purposes, diminish the volume of water which, flowing into the Hudson, make it a navigable stream, to such an extent as to destroy its navigability, undoubtedly the jurisdiction of the National Government would arise and its power to restrain such appropriation be unquestioned." (709.)

In United States v. Lynch (188 U. S., 445), it appeared that the United States for the purpose of improving the navigability of the Savannah River constructed "certain dams, training walls, and other obstructions" which it was claimed flooded the lands belonging to Lynch so "as to substantially destroy their value." The question in the case was whether "the Government in the exercise of its powers of eminent domain and regulation of commerce" had taken the property of the plaintiff below and should make compensation therefor. It is obvious that if the Congress had no constitutional power to improve the navigability of the river by holding back its flow by the dam, its acts would have been tortious and not the legal basis for the exercise of the right of eminent domain. The case was elaborately argued, and there was a vigorous dissenting opinion by some of the ablest members of the court, the majority holding, however, "that there has been a taking of the lands for public uses, and that the Government is under an implied contract to make just compensation therefor." There is no intimation in either the arguments or the opinions that there was any question as to the right of the Government to erect and maintain the dam for the purposes indicated, and the case must have proceeded upon the theory that exercise of such a right was a constitutional exercise of power. Indeed, the minority opinion in substance declares that the damage was "caused by the lawful exercise of the United States of its power to improve navigation," but insists that it was "damnum absque injuria."

We may therefore consider it settled that the United States may constitutionally expend money in damming the waters of a river to improve its navigability. As the Government has the right to take the land of a private individual at one point in a river by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, for the purpose of improving its navigability, it is difficult to see why it can not acquire the land of other individuals, at any other point on the river from its source to its mouth, by purchase or eminent domain (involuntary sale by the owner), for the same purpose to accomplish the same result, especially in view of the fact that it is held that the construction of a dam may be restrained, if it impairs the navigability of the river, though it may be located above the navigable point in a nonnavigable part of the river. The particular means used can not determine the constitutionality of the exercise of the power. If the means are appropriate, the result accomplished is the test. If an artificial reservoir may be created and maintained at one point, no reason is perceived why a natural reservoir may not be restored and maintained at another point. If the purpose and result be the same. The Government has undoubted power to remove obstructions from the navigable part of the river, to prevent obstructions from being placed therein or over the same, to prevent obstructions in the nonnavigable portions that impair its navigability. It would seem to follow that if reforesting the watershed at its source was an appropriate means "plainly adapted to that end" of preventing the depositing in the river of accumulations that would obstruct its navigable portion, that Congress would have the right to acquire and control them for that purpose.

The foresting of the watershed at the source of a river and the prevention of the accumulation of obstruction within its navigable limits, or the improvement of its navigability by increasing the flow of the water therein during the dry season must, in our judgment, be something more than theoretical, technical, fanciful, or negligible. It must be physical, tangible, actual, and substantial, demonstrable by satisfactory competent testimony, in order to justify an appropriation for that purpose. The protection or the improvement of the navigability of the river must also be the real, effective, sole, and not the incidental, purpose of the appropriation. It would not justify an appropriation when the real purpose is the conservation of the supply of raw material for forestry products, or the development of water powers and the protection or improvement of the navigability of the river is only theoretical or incidental thereto. The improvement or conservation of the navigability of the river must be the only purpose for which the appropriation is made. In such case the fact, if it be a fact, that other useful purposes are also served, does not militate against the exercise of the power to accomplish the real purpose of the appropriation, as a matter of law. As a matter of law, such purposes can not be a part of the purpose, although as a matter of fact they may be among the necessary incidentals of the result. In this connection what constitutes navigability should be stated. This is well settled.

In The Daniel Ball (10 Wall., 463) the court said: "Those rivers must be regarded as public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact, and they are navigable in fact when they are used or are susceptible of being used in their ordinary condition for highways of commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of the United States within the meaning of the acts of Congress in contradistinction of the navigable waters of the State, when they form in their ordinary conditions by themselves or by uniting with other waters a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water." . . .

And "It would be a narrow rule to hold that in this country unless a river was capable of being navigated by steam or sail vessels it could not be treated as a public highway. The capability of use by the public for purposes of transportation and commerce affords the true criterion of the navigability of a river, rather than the extent and manner of that use. If it be capable in its natural state of being used for purposes of commerce, no matter in what mode the commerce may be conducted, it is navigable in fact and becomes in law a public river or highway" the court said in The Montello (20 Wall., 441). These cases have been cited and approved in numerous cases, which are collected in notes to United States Reports, volume 7, page 306, and volume 8, page 328. Whether the deforesting of the land described in the bill has any physical and tangible connection with the navigability of the rivers which have their sources in the respective watersheds was a subject of controversy before our committee, and upon that question of fact we express no opinion, but upon the hypothesis above set forth we are of the opinion that for that specific purpose, and that purpose only, an appropriation can lawfully be made, and that the legislation therefor must in terms be confined to that purpose. It also follows that no land can lawfully be acquired in excess of what is necessary for the carrying out of that purpose, and the bills before us are not properly limited as to the amount that can be lawfully acquired for the one constitutional purpose for which the appropriation can be made.

I concur with the foregoing views except that I regard it as at least very doubtful whether the United States can in any event acquire land in the several States for forest purposes. I file separate views on that subject.

VIEWS OF MR. BRANTLEY.

The Committee on the Judiciary has before it House resolution No. 208, which reads as follows:

"Whereas the President, in his message to the Congress at its present session, on December 3, 1907, makes the following recommendation:

"We should acquire in the Appalachian and White Mountain regions all the forest lands that it is possible to acquire for the use of the nation. These lands, because they form a national asset, are as emphatically national as the rivers which they feed, and which flow through so many States before they reach the ocean;" and

"Whereas there have been introduced into the House of Representatives bills for the acquirement of national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and the White Mountains, the same being H. R. 10456 and H. R. 10457, which provide as follows:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed, in his discretion, to acquire for national forest purposes, by purchase or gift, lands more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for other purposes, and situated on the watersheds of navigable streams in the Southern Appalachian Mountains within the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and in the White Mountains within the States of New Hampshire and Maine."

"That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the lands to be acquired under this act; but no payment shall be made for any such lands until the title shall be satisfactory to the Attorney-General and shall be vested in the United States."

"That the sum of $5,000,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and said sum shall be available immediately and until expended for said purpose: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall each year make a detailed report to Congress of the lands purchased under this act, and the cost thereof; Therefore be it

Resolved, That so much of the President's message, above referred to, which relates to the acquisition of lands in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains 'for the use of the nation' be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, together with the questions involved in the bills referred to, directing the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire for national forest purposes lands in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains, within the States named, with instructions to said committee to report fully at an early date their views as to the power of the Federal Government by legislation to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the lands referred to in said bills, situated in the States mentioned, and to appropriate money therefor, and also what power and authority the Federal Government has by legislation to acquire for the purpose of forest reserves lands within a State wherein the Government of the United States has no public domain, and to make appropriation therefor."

It is to be noted that said resolution refers to the committee a certain portion of the President's message, together with certain questions involved in two House bills, to wit, H. R. 10456 and 10457; that is, the questions involved in "directing the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire for national forest purposes lands in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains within the States named." The resolution then instructs the committee to report fully at an early date their views, first, "as to the power of the Federal Government by legislation to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the lands referred to in said bills, situated in the States mentioned, and to appropriate money therefor;" and, second, "what power and authority the Federal Government has by legislation to acquire for the purpose of forest reserves lands within a State wherein the Government of the United States has no public domain, and to make appropriation therefor."

The power of the General Government to acquire land in a State by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise being unquestioned, where the same is necessary to some governmental use, authorized by the Constitution, it becomes necessary in the very outset of the investigation directed to be made to inquire as to the uses for which it is proposed to acquire the land and the forest reserves referred to in said resolution. In McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheaton, 421) it is said:

"Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adequate to that end, which are not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional."

Our inquiry must be, first, as to whether the owning of lands and forest reserves in a State by the General Government is itself the end sought to be attained by acquiring them or whether such acquiring is designed as a means to some other end. This inquiry must be determined before we can pass on the question of whether the end is legitimate and within the scope of the Constitution. The importance of this inquiry is further apparent in the light of the statement of the Supreme Court in 117 U. S., 158, in the case of Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, to wit:

"The United States do not and can not hold property as a monarch may for private or personal purposes. All the property and revenues of the United States must be held and applied as all taxes, duties, imposts, and excises must be laid and collected 'to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.'"

Unless, therefore, it shall appear that said lands and forest reserves are proposed to be held and used in some way for the general welfare, under some power delegated to Congress by the Constitution, it requires no argument to demonstrate that Congress has no power to acquire or to hold them.

THE PROPOSED USE OF FOREST RESERVES.

Directing our inquiry, therefore, in the first place, to the proposed uses of the said land and forest reserves, it is essential to carefully scrutinize all the language of the said House bills 10456 and 10457, and as well the history of said bills in so far as the same is shown in the proceedings of the previous Congress and in the results of the act of the previous Congress. Proceeding with the investigation in this way, we find that the agricultural bill approved March 4, 1907, required the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the watersheds of the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains "and to report to Congress the area and natural conditions of said watersheds, the price at which the same can be purchased by the Government, and the advisability of the Government purchasing and setting apart the same as national forest reserves for the purpose of conserving and regulating the water supply and flow of said stream in the interest of agriculture, water power, and navigation."

The important thing here to be observed is that the Fifty-ninth Congress in ordering said survey distinctly directed that information be furnished as to the advisability of acquiring the proposed forest reserves, not as an end in itself, but as a means to other specified ends, to wit, "for the purpose of conserving and regulating the water supply and flow of said streams in the interest of agriculture, water power, and navigation."

It is a just assumption that the Fifty-ninth Congress felt authorized in appropriating money for this survey, and it is to be noted that one of the ends sought to be achieved by the survey, whatever may be said of the others, was clearly within the constitutional power of Congress, and that end is the conserving and regulating the water supply of certain streams in the interest of navigation. I have examined the report of the Secretary of Agriculture made in pursuance of said direction of the Fifty-ninth Congress. The same is embraced in Senate Document No. 91, Sixtieth Congress, first session. In this report the Secretary states, among other things, that "all the waters gathered by the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains flow to the sea through navigable rivers," and he submits an argument supported by facts presented by him that the preservation of the forests in these mountains would equalize the flow of these rivers, tending to the avoidance of floods and freshets and to a greater volume of water in time of drought. His argument is that forest reserves in these mountains would aid navigation in all streams having their source in these mountains. The committee does not undertake to pass judgment on this argument, but refers to it in order to determine whether or not there is any constitutional purpose sought to be accomplished by the proposed forest reserves. Gentlemen presumably competent to advise on such matters have appeared before the committee and urged that the preservation of the forests on the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains would materially aid the navigability of certain navigable rivers, but, as just stated, the committee does not feel that it has jurisdiction or is called upon to report a conclusion on the facts involved in this argument.

We next take notice of H. R. 10456 and H. R. 10457, the language in each being the same. The description of the lands to be acquired under these bills is, first, "lands more valuable for the stream flow than for other purposes," and, second, lands "situated on the watersheds of navigable streams." This language clearly indicates a relation of some kind between these lands and the streams having their origin in them and a purpose to utilize that relation in the interest of such streams. Provision is made in the bill for allowing private parties to control any minerals that may be on the lands acquired, and as well that merchantable timber may be removed by such parties under regulations to be prescribed by the Government. Provision is also made for private parties to obtain lands "chiefly valuable for agriculture" that the Government may chance to acquire in its purchases of forest lands. All these provisions point directly to the conclusion that one of the purposes of these bills, if not the primary purpose, is to control the watersheds of the streams rising in these mountains in the direct interest of these streams. The exclusion of minerals, merchantable timber, and agricultural lands from the reserves leaves no other conclusion to be fairly reached. That this conclusion is correct, is shown, I think, in the language of section 10 of the bills, to wit: "That the Secretary of Agriculture may, for further protection of the watersheds of said navigable streams," do certain other things. In other words, all that precedes in the bills is for the purpose of protecting the watersheds of navigable rivers, and what follows in section 10 is for the further protection of such watersheds.

THE REAL INQUIRY.

Assuming that this conclusion as to the purpose of these bills is correct, the real inquiry that is presented to the committee relates to the power of Congress under the Constitution to acquire lands and establish forest reserves in a State where no public domain now exists for the purpose of improving or adding to the navigability of certain navigable rivers. The committee is not called upon to determine whether, as a matter of fact, the growth of forests or the preservation of forests on mountains would aid the navigability of navigable rivers having their source in such mountains. That question, presumably, the House has reserved for its own decision. The committee is called upon to report simply on the question of power, assuming the existence of the facts necessary to the exercise of the power. The power of Congress over navigation and to appropriate money for the improvement of rivers and harbors has been so universally acquiesced in for so long a period of time as to be now unquestioned. This power is derived from the commerce clause of the Constitution. As far back as 3 Wallace, 724, in the case of Gilman v. Philadelphia, the Supreme Court said:

"Commerce includes navigation. The power to regulate commerce comprehends the control for that purpose and to the extent necessary of all the navigable waters of the United States which are accessible from a State other than that in which they lie. For this purpose they are the public property of the nation and subject to all the requisite legislation by Congress. This necessarily includes the power to keep them open and free from any obstruction to their navigation, imposed by the State or otherwise; to remove such obstructions when they exist, and to provide by such sanctions as they may deem proper against the occurrence of the evil and for the punishment of offenders. For these purposes Congress possesses all the power which existed in the States before the adoption of the National Constitution and which have always existed in the Parliament of England. It is for Congress to determine when its full power shall be brought into activity and as to the regulation and sanction which shall be provided."

The Secretary of Agriculture has informed us that all the navigable rivers having their source in the mountains referred to, and that it is claimed would be benefited by the proposed forest reserves, "flow to the sea." They are all therefore "accessible from a State other than those in which they lie" and are "subject to all the requisite legislation by Congress" for their control in the regulation of commerce. Congress having the power "to keep them open and free from any obstructions" and "to remove such obstructions," and having the power "to provide by such sanctions as they may deem proper against the occurrence of the evil," and also "to determine when its full power shall be brought into activity," and also to determine "as to the regulation and sanctions which shall be provided," it would seem to be incontrovertible under this authority that Congress has the power to acquire and own the proposed forest reserves if in its judgment such forest reserves would aid navigation. The question, it seems to me, is one of discretion, not one of power.

The Savannah River is one of the rivers that it is claimed would be directly benefited by the proposed forest reserves. In the case of South Carolina v. Georgia et al. (94 U. S., 4), the second headnote reads: "Congress has the same power over the Savannah River that it has over the other navigable waters of the United States."

In the opinion the court says, page 9:

"That the power to regulate interstate commerce and commerce with foreign nations, conferred upon Congress by the Constitution, extends to the control of navigable rivers between States—rivers that are accessible from other States at least to the extent of improving their navigability—has not been questioned during the argument nor could it be with any show of reason. From an early period in the history of the Government it has been so understood and determined."

The court quotes the extract from Gilman v. Philadelphia (3 Wallace, 724) just above and says:

"Such has uniformly been the construction given to that clause of the Constitution which confers upon Congress the power to regulate commerce."

In a Wisconsin case, reported in 96 U. S., 387, the same involving certain river and harbor improvements and the laws of Congress in reference to them, the court, in speaking of these laws, says:

"They amount to the declaration of the Federal Government that we here interpose and assert our power. We take upon ourselves the burden of this improvement which properly belongs to us and that hereafter this work for the public good is in our hands and subject to our control. Nor can there be any doubt that such action is within the constitutional power of Congress. It is a power which has been exercised ever since the Government was organized under the Constitution."

In the celebrated case of Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheaton) the court said, page 190:

"The power over commerce, including navigation, was one of the primary objects for which the people of America adopted their Government, and must have been contemplated in forming it."

Again, on page 195, the court says:

"The deep streams which penetrate our country in every direction pass through the interior of almost every State in the Union, and furnish the means of exercising this right. If Congress has the power to regulate it, that power must be exercised wherever the subject exists."

CONGRESS HAS POWER BEYOND NAVIGABLE PORTIONS OF STREAMS.

The power of Congress over navigation extends beyond that portion of a navigable stream that is actually navigable, and it covers every navigable river in the United States. Congress long ago exercised its power over a navigable river beyond the point of its navigability, and the Supreme Court has upheld its act in so doing.

In the act of September 19, 1890 (26 Stat., 454, par. 10), it is provided:

"That the creation of any obstruction, not affirmatively authorized by law, to the navigable capacity of any waters, in respect of which the United States has jurisdiction, is hereby prohibited, etc."

Again, in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, in section 10, it is provided—

"That the creation of any obstruction not affirmatively authorized by Congress to the navigable capacity of any of the waters of the United States is hereby prohibited."

Note must be given to the broader language used in the later act and to the substitution of "authorized by Congress" for "authorized by law." Both these laws are construed in a case reported in 174 U. S., 690. Here a dam was proposed to be erected in the waters of a navigable river, but at a point far above where the river was actually navigable. The United States Government sought to enjoin the building of the dam, on the ground that it would interfere with the navigable portion of the river by decreasing the supply of water. The lower court's decision was adverse to the Government. A reversal was had in the Supreme Court and the case remanded with directions in which there is ordered an "inquiry into the question whether the intended act of the defendants in the construction of a dam and in appropriating the waters of the Rio Grande will substantially diminish the navi-gability of that stream within the limits of present navigability, and, if so, to enter a decree restraining these acts to the extent that they will so diminish."

In the opinion, page 703, the court, in speaking of the power of a State to permit the appropriation of flowing waters for such purposes as it deems wise, said there were two limitations to this power. The first, that a State can not in the absence of authority from Congress so legislate as to destroy the right of the United States, as the owner of lands bordering on a stream, to the continued flow of the waters; the second—"that it is limited by the superior power of the General Government to secure the uninterrupted navigability of all navigable streams within the limits of the United States. In other words, the jurisdiction of the General Government over interstate commerce and its natural highways vests in that Government the right to take all needed measures to preserve the navigability of the navigable water courses of the country, even against any State action."

The court further discussed the act of September 19, 1890, as amended and reenacted July 13, 1892, 27 Stat., 110 (quoted above), and said, page 708:

"It was an exercise by Congress of the power oftentimes declared by the court to belong to it of national control over navigable streams."

"It is urged that the true construction of this act limits its applicability to obstructions in the navigable portion of a navigable stream, and that as it appears that although the Rio Grande may be navigable for a certain distance above its mouth, it is not navigable in the Territory of New Mexico, the statute has no applicability. The language is general and must be given full scope. It is not a prohibition of any obstruction to the navigation, but any obstruction to the navigable capacity, and anything, wherever done, or however done, within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States which tends to destroy the navigable capacity of one of the navigable waters of the United States is within the terms of the prohibition. Evidently Congress, perceiving that the time had come when the growing interests of commerce required that the navigable waters of the United States should be subjected to the direct control of the National Government, and that nothing should be done by any State tending to destroy that navigability without the explicit assent of the National Government, enacted the statute in question, and it would be to improperly ignore the scope of this language to limit it to the acts done within the very limits of navigation of a navigable stream."

If Congress has the power, as this opinion declares, to legislate against obstructions that interfere with the "navigable capacity" of navigable streams "wherever done or however done within the limits of the United States," and regardless of whether done in the navigable portions of such streams, why has not Congress an equal power to legislate in the same way to increase the "navigable capacity" of such streams? If it be a fact that denuding the mountains of their forest results in filling up the navigable streams in their navigable portions with silt, dirt, or debris, causing obstructions therein, why has not Congress the same power to prevent the formation of such obstructions that it has to remove such obstructions after they have been formed? If Congress has the power to remove a dam, placed far above the navigable portion of a navigable stream, because it is an obstruction to the navigable portion of the stream, in that it decreases the flow of water, why has not Congress equal power to remove any other obstructions in the stream at any point between the ending of navigation and the source of the stream, if such obstruction decreases the flow of water in the navigable portion of such stream? If it be a fact that destroying the forests on the mountain side results in a greatly reduced flow of water during periods of drought in all streams having their origin in such mountains, why has not Congress the same power where such streams are navigable to prevent the destruction of such forests that it has to prevent a dam at some other point on the non-navigable portion of the stream? Why is not one thing just as important to be done as the other in the interest of navigation? Is not prevention more important than cure, and particularly so when in all the experience of our Government cure by dredging has never been anything but a temporary cure? In the light of the authority just quoted, there appears to be involved in the resolutions referred to the committee only questions of fact and matters of policy. The existence of the power inquired about appears to be amply assured.

The case of Kansas v. Colorado, reported in 206 U. S., 46, is not an authority against the existence in Congress of such power, but, on the contrary, in so far as it touches this particular question of power, the opinion clearly indicates its existence. In this case the Supreme Court denied the power of the United States to control the waters of a river in a State for the purpose of reclamation of arid lands, the court holding that the reclamation of arid lands within a State is not within the constitutional power of Congress. But the court said, page 86:

"It follows from this that if in the present case the National Government was asserting as against either Kansas or Colorado that the appropriation for the purposes of irrigation of the waters of the Arkansas was affecting the navigability of the stream, it would become our duty to determine the truth of the charge. But the Government makes no such contention. On the contrary, it distinctly asserts that the Arkansas River is not now and never was practically navigable beyond Fort Gibson, in the Indian Territory, and nowhere claims that any appropriation of the waters by Kansas or Colorado affects its navigability."

In the syllabus the existence of the specific power being discussed is clearly recognized, to wit:

"While Congress has general legislative jurisdiction over the Territories and may control the flow of waters in their streams, it has no power to control a like flow within the limits of a State, except to preserve or improve the navigability of the stream."

Here is express recognition of the power of Congress, within a State, to control the flow of a stream for the purpose of preserving or improving its navigability.

If it be a fact that a forest on the mountain side will control the flow of a stream having its origin in the mountain, and that such control will preserve or will improve the navigability of the stream, why is not the language quoted direct authority for Congress to preserve the forests on such mountain side?

The syllabus just quoted from Kansas v. Colorado, amply supported as it is by the full text of the opinion, furnishes authority for the contention that Congress has no constitutional power to control the flow of a stream within a State for the purpose of aiding agriculture or improving water power, which are two other alleged purposes of forest reserves, as shown in the order for survey contained in the act of March 4, 1907, but at the same time it furnishes equally strong authority for the proposition that Congress may control such stream flow for the purpose of preserving or improving the navigability of such streams.

It can not be seriously argued that because Congress in aiding navigation will at the same time produce other beneficial results, that Congress has no power to aid navigation. The control and regulation of the flow of water in a stream would undoubtedly improve the value of the water power on such stream, but it would to a greater extent improve the navigability of the stream. If such stream was navigable, there could be no use made of its water power by a State or individuals that would interfere with its "navigable capacity," and its water power, controlled as it would be by the State, whatever might be its value, would be subservient to the preservation of its navigability. If by controlling stream flow freshets and floods could be avoided or substantially reduced in volume or in frequency, agriculture would undoubtedly be benefited, because agricultural lands would be saved the deposits destroying their fertility and left on them by overflows; but would not this be a mere incident? Must Congress be denied its undoubted power to improve and preserve the navigability of navigable streams because in so doing there will be other beneficial results? Congress has never made an appropriation for any public improvement in any community, whether for harbor improvements or buildings, that has not resulted in benefiting the community in many ways, and yet the appropriation has always been justified because intended for a distinct constitutional purpose.

The incidental benefits in other directions that have followed have never stood in the way of an appropriation for a legitimate end.

PREVIOUS ACTS OF CONGRESS.

The direct question as to the power of Congress to aid navigation by acquiring land within a State to be used as forest reserves has never arisen, so far as I am advised, but both Congress and the Supreme Court have repeatedly recognized the power of Congress to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, lands within a State for the purpose generally of aiding navigation.

I am not prepared to advise that this power is limited to any specific area of land short of what is actually necessary for the particular constitutional purpose of aiding navigation.

The act of April 28, 1888 (25 Stat., 94), reads:

"The Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings for the acquirement by condemnation of any land, right of way, or material needed to enable him to maintain, operate, or prosecute work for the improvement of rivers and harbors for which provision has been made by law, such proceedings to be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the States wherein the proceedings may be instituted: Provided, however, That when the owner of such land, right of way, or material shall fix a price for the same, which in the opinion of the Secretary of War shall be reasonable, he may purchase the same at such price without further delay: And provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept donations of lands or material required for the maintenance or prosecution of such works."

In 188 U. S., 445, is reported a case for damages against the United States, caused by overflowing lands as the result of putting in dams and training walls in the Savannah River. The damages were allowed.

In the syllabus, the court says:

"Notwithstanding that the work causing the injury was done in improving the navigability of a navigable river, and by the Constitution Congress is given full control over such improvements, the injuries can not be regarded as purely consequential, and the Government can not appropriate property without being liable to the obligation created by the fifth amendment of paying just compensation."

Mr. Justice Brewer said, page 404:

"It is earnestly contended in argument that the Government had a right to appropriate this property. This may be conceded, but there is a vast difference between a proprietary and a governmental right."

"Very different from this proprietary right of the Government in respect to property which it owns is its governmental right to appropriate the property of individuals."

"All private property is held subject to the necessities of government."

The right of eminent domain underlies all such rights of property. The Government may take personal or real property, whenever its necessities or the exigencies of the occasion demand."

Congress has extended its power to nonnavigable waters adjacent to navigable waters, and for the express purpose of preventing the navigable waters from being filled up with earth and other material, the identical purpose that it is claimed forest reserves would serve. In 85 Statutes, Law 1147, Congress has empowered the Secretary of War "to prescribe regulations to govern the transportation and dumping into any navigable waters or waters adjacent thereto, of dredgings, earth, garbage, and other refuse materials of every kind or description, whenever in his judgment such regulations are required in the interest of navigation."

Congress has extended its jurisdiction to prevent floods in a navigable river, another purpose that it is claimed forest reserves would serve. In 21 Statutes, Law 38, Congress conferred the power upon and made it the duty of the Mississippi River Commission to mature, among others, plans "to prevent destructive floods."

THE POWER GENERALLY TO ACQUIRE LAND.

I stated in the outset that the power of Congress to acquire land in a State by purchase or condemnation was unquestioned, provided a necessity to acquire it for some legitimate governmental use existed. The authorities for this proposition are ample.

Article 1, section 8, of the Constitution reads:

"Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings."

This section, however, is not in any respect a limitation on the power of Congress to acquire lands in a State, but is a limitation on the power of Congress to "exercise exclusive legislation."

In Kohl v. U. S., reported in 91 U. S., 367, 371, the court says:

"The powers vested by the Constitution in the General Government demand for their exercise the acquisition of lands in all the States. These are needed for forts, armories, and arsenals, for navy-yards and light-houses, for custom-houses, post-offices, and court-houses, and for other public uses."

Also—

"No one doubts the existence in the State governments of the right of eminent domain—a right distinct from and paramount to the right of ultimate ownership. But it is no more necessary for the exercise of the powers of a State government than it is for the exercise of the conceded powers of the Federal Government. That Government is as sovereign within its sphere as the States are within theirs. True, its sphere is limited. Certain subjects only are committed to it; but its power over those subjects is as full and complete as is the power of the States over the subjects to which their sovereignty extends. The power is not changed by its transfer to another holder. But if the right of eminent domain exists in the Federal Government, it is a right which may be exercised within the States, so far as is necessary to the enjoyment of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution."

In 109 U. S., 518, the court says:

"The power to take private property for public uses, generally termed the right of eminent domain, belongs to every independent government. It is an incident of sovereignty and, as said in Boom v. Patterson (98 U. S., 106), requires no constitutional recognition."

In Fort Leavenworth Railroad Company v. Lowe (114 U. S., 527) the syllabus states:

"In the act admitting Kansas as a State, there was no reservation of Federal jurisdiction over the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation. The State of Kansas subsequently ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, 'saving further to said State the right to tax railroad, bridge, or other corporations, their franchises and property, on said reservation.' Held, that the property and franchises of a railroad company within the reservation was liable to pay taxes in the State of Kansas, imposed according to its laws."

On page 530 the court, after quoting Article I, section 8 of the Constitution, says:

"This power of exclusive legislation is to be exercised, as thus seen, over places purchased by consent of the legislatures of the States in which they are situated, for the specific purposes enumerated. . . . Purchase with such consent was the only mode then thought of for the acquisition by the General Government of title to lands in the States. Since the adoption of the Constitution this view has not generally prevailed. Such consent has not always been obtained nor supposed necessary for the purchase by the General Government of lands within the States. . . . The consent of the States to the purchase of lands within them for the special purposes named is, however, essential under the Constitution to the transfer to the General Government, with the title of political jurisdiction and dominion. When lands are acquired without such consent, the possession of the United States, unless political jurisdiction be ceded to them in some other way, is simply that of an ordinary proprietor. The property in that case, unless used as a means to carry out the purposes of the Government, is subject to the legislative authority and control of the States equally with the property of private individuals. But not only by direct purchase have the United States been able to acquire lands they needed without the consent of the States, but it has been held that they possess the right of eminent domain within the States, using those terms, not as expressing ultimate dominion or title to property, but as indicating the right to take private property for public uses, when needed to execute the powers conferred by the Constitution; and that the General Government is not dependent upon the caprice of individuals or the will of State legislatures in the acquisition of such lands as may be required for the full and effective exercise of its powers. This doctrine was authoritatively declared in Kohl v. United States" (91 U. S., 367.)

The court, after quoting from various opinions of other courts and of Attorneys-General of the United States, concludes, page 539:

"Where, therefore, lands are acquired in any other way by the United States within the limits of a State than by purchase with her consent, they will hold the lands subject to this qualification: that if upon them forts, arsenals, or other public buildings are erected for the uses of the General Government, such buildings with their appurtenances, as instrumentalities for the execution of its powers, will be free from any such interference and jurisdiction of the State as would destroy or impair their effective use for the purposes designed. Such is the law with reference to all instrumentalities created by the General Government. Their exemption from State control is essential to the independence of and sovereign authority of the United States within the sphere of their delegated powers. But when not used as instrumentalities, the legislative power of the State over the places acquired will be as full and complete as over any other places within her limits."

In reference to the particular case before it, the court said, page 539:

"It not being a case where exclusive legislative authority is vested by the Constitution in the United States, that cession could be accompanied with such conditions as the State might see fit to annex, not inconsistent with the free and effective use of the fort as a military post."

In answer to the objection that a State has no power to cede away her jurisdiction and legislative power over any portion of her territory, except as such cession follows under the Constitution from her consent to a purchase by the United States for some one of the purposes mentioned in the Constitution, the court says, page 540:

"It is undoubtedly true that the State, whether represented by her legislature or through a convention specially called for that purpose, is incompetent to cede her political jurisdiction and legislative authority over any part of her territory to a foreign country without the concurrence of the General Government."

But the court says, page 541:

"In their relation to the General Government the States of the Union stand in a very different position from that which they hold to foreign governments. Though the jurisdiction and authority of the General Government are essentially different from those of the State, they are not those of a different country; and the two, the State and the General Government, may deal with each other in any way they may deem best to carry out the purposes of the Constitution."

The question presented in Van Brocklin v. State of Tennessee (117 U. S., 151) was whether lands in the State of Tennessee sold for taxes by the United States and bought in by the United States could be taxed by the State while they were owned by the United States. In a most elaborate opinion the court held they could not be so taxed. The syllabus is:

"Property of the United States is exempt by the Constitution of the United States from taxation under the authority of a State."

In the opinion this summing up of the power of the United States to acquire and own lands within a State is made, page 154:

"So the United States, at the discretion of Congress, may acquire and hold real property in any State, whenever such property is needed for the use of the Government, in the execution of any of its powers, whether for arsenals, fortifications, light-houses, custom-houses, court-houses, barracks, or hospitals, or for any other of the many public purposes for which such property is used; and when the property can not be acquired by voluntary arrangement with its owners it may be taken against their will by the United States, in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, upon making just compensation, with or without a concurrent act of the State in which the land is situated (10 Peter, 25; 91 U. S., 367; 94 U. S., 315, 320; 100 U. S., 513; 112 U. S., 645; 114 U. S., 525)."

In Cherokee Nation v. Kansas Railway Company (135 U. S., 641) the court denied the right of the Cherokee Nation, as the owner of land in the Indian Territory, to prevent a railroad company, under power vested in it by Congress, from condemning such land for right of way. The court said, page 656:

"The fact that the Cherokee Nation holds these lands in fee simple under patents from the United States is of no consequence in the present discussion, for the United States may exercise the right of eminent domain, even within the limits of the several States, for purposes necessary to the execution of the powers granted to the General Government by the Constitution."

The court quotes with approval the opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley, in 35 Federal Reporter, 9, 19, page 656, as follows:

"The argument based upon the doctrine that the States have the eminent domain or highest dominion in the lands comprised within their limits, and that the United States have no dominion in such lands, can not avail to frustrate the supremacy given by the Constitution to the Government of the United States in all matters within the scope of its sovereignty. . . . Whatever may be the necessities or conclusions of theoretical law as to eminent domain or anything else, it must be received as a postulate of the Constitution that the Government of the United States is invested with full and complete power to execute and carry out its purposes."

The court further, page 657, said:

"The lands in the Cherokee territory, like the lands held by private owners everywhere within the geographical limits of the United States, are held subject to the authority of the General Government to take them for such objects as are germane to the execution of the powers granted to it, provided only that they are not taken without just compensation being made to the owner."

In United States v. Gettysburg Electric Railway (160 U. S., 668) it is held not only that the United States has power to hold lands in a State for the purpose of "preserving the lines of battle at Gettysburg, Pa., and for properly marking with tablets the positions occupied by the various commands of the armies of the Potomac and of northern Virginia on that field, and for opening and improving avenues along the positions occupied by troops upon those lines, and for fencing the same, and for determining the leading tactical positions of batteries, regiments, brigades, divisions, corps, and other organizations, with reference to the study and correct understanding of the battle and to mark the same with suitable tablets, each bearing a brief historical legend compiled without praise and without censure," but that the United States has power to condemn lands within a State for such purpose. The court below held that "the intended use of the land is not that kind of a public use for which the United States has the constitutional power to condemn land," and this holding was reversed by the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Justice Peckham, for the court, page 679, said the important question to be determined was whether the use proposed was of that kind of public use for which the Government of the United States is authorized to condemn land. He said:

"It has authority to do so whenever it is necessary or appropriate to use the land in the execution of any of the powers granted to it by the Constitution."

He said, page 680:

"Upon the question whether the proposed use of this land is a public one, we think there can be no well-founded doubt. And also, in our judgment, the Government has the constitutional power to condemn the land for the proposed use. It is, of course, not necessary that the power of condemnation for such purpose be expressly given by the Constitution. The right to condemn at all is not so given. It results from the powers that are given, and it is implied, because of its necessity or because it is appropriate in exercising these powers. Congress has the power to declare war and to create and equip armies and navies. It has the great power of taxation to be exercised for the common defense and general welfare. Having such powers, it has such other and implied ones as are necessary and appropriate for the purpose of carrying the powers expressly given into effect. Any act of Congress which plainly and directly tends to enhance the respect and love of the citizen for the institutions of his country, and to quicken and strengthen his motives to defend them, and which is germane to and intimately connected with and appropriate to the exercise of some one or all of the powers granted by Congress, must be valid. This proposed use comes within such description."

He further said:

"The end to be attained by this proposed use, as provided for by the act of Congress, is legitimate and lies within the scope of the Constitution."

He further said, page 683:

"Its national character and importance, we think, are plain. The power to condemn for this purpose need not be plainly and unmistakably deduced from any one of the particularly specified powers. Any number of these powers may be grouped together, and an inference from them all may be drawn that the power claimed has been conferred."

These authorities fully sustain the proposition that Congress has the power to acquire lands in any State for any legitimate governmental use, and that Article I, section 8, of the Constitution does not limit this power. The limitation of this power that is fixed by the Constitution is that such lands can be acquired only in execution of some power that is delegated to Congress.

POLITICAL POWER AND LEGISLATIVE CONTROL.

If the United States should acquire a forest reserve in a State, a most interesting and important question would arise as to where the political power and legislative control over such forest reserve would vest, and this is a question separate and apart from the question of power in the United States to acquire such reserve. H. R. 10456 and 10457 provide that such reserves shall not be acquired in a State without the consent of such State. The language of section 2 is:

"That no deed or other instrument of conveyance shall be accepted or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act until the legislature of the State in which the land lies shall have consented to the acquisition of such land by the United States for national forest purposes."

Section 4 prohibits any payment for the lands "until the title shall be satisfactory to the Attorney-General and shall be vested in the United States." If the State consents to the passing of the title for national forest purposes and the title is actually approved and passed, nothing further will be required by the United States. Section 8 gives to the United States jurisdiction to punish offenses only, leaving all other jurisdiction in the State. Section 7, however, provides that "The lands acquired under this act shall be permanently reserved, held, and administered as national forest lands under the provision of section 24 of the act approved March 3, 1891, volume 26, Statutes 1103, and acts supplemental to and amendatory thereof."

This section confers more jurisdiction on the United States than the simple one of punishing offenses.

In my opinion, should the United States acquire forest reserves in a State for the purpose of navigation, which it has the constitutional power to do, and no more appeared than the mere fact of acquiring title by the United States, whether by purchase or condemnation, the United States would hold such land as any other proprietor in the State, subject to the complete jurisdiction of the State, save in two particulars. The State could not tax the lands, nor could it interfere with the governmental uses for which the United States acquired them. This, I think, is made perfectly clear by the Fort Leavenworth case (114 U. S., 527) and the Van Brocklin case (117 U. S., 151), as well as in some of the other cases already cited. In order for the United States to exercise any other jurisdiction over such lands, the State would have to expressly cede such other jurisdiction. These bills require no cession of jurisdiction by the States. They simply require the consent of the State that the title shall pass for national forest purposes. The consent to the passing of title would not add anything to the two rights or privileges already referred to, for these the United States would enjoy, even though the State had not consented to the passing of the title.

In the absence of a cession of jurisdiction for that purpose by the State, the United States would have no jurisdiction to set apart such lands as "permanent national forest lands" and control them as such for a purpose wholly unrelated to navigation, nor could the State cede jurisdiction for such purpose, for the power of the State and the power of the United States is each limited to ceding jurisdiction and accepting jurisdiction over land within a State for a constitutional use, and such use, as we have already seen, is not a constitutional use. Again, forest reserves as an aid to navigation not being "needful buildings," nor in any sense related to the properties or purposes described in Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, it is much to be doubted if the United States, even with the express grant of the State, could exercise "exclusive" legislative power over them. There is some force in the suggestion that Article I, section 8, of the Constitution limits the power of the United States to exercise "exclusive" legislative power in a State to the particular properties and purposes enumerated. Be that as it may, however, it is quite evident that a simple consent of the State that the United States might purchase lands within its domain would confer no legislative power, exclusive or otherwise, on the United States that would not attach without such consent.

Where land is acquired in a State by the United States for one of the purposes enumerated in Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, and the State consents thereto, the Constitution immediately confers exclusive legislative power over such land upon the United States. In the case of Fort Leavenworth (114 U. S., 527) the court quotes with approval, on page 533, from Mr. Justice Story, in United States v. Cornell (2 Mason, 60), as follows:

"For it may well be doubted whether Congress is by the terms of the Constitution at liberty to purchase lands, property, dockyards, etc., with the consent of the State legislature, where such consent is so qualified that it will not justify exclusive legislation of Congress there. It may well be doubted if such consent be not utterly void."

This rule has no application to lands acquired in a State for some constitutional purpose other than those enumerated in Article I, section 8, and in all such other cases where a State cedes jurisdiction it may limit or qualify such cession as it sees proper to do.

In Cooley's Constitutional Law, third edition, page 103, the entire matter is summed up as follows:

"The Constitution, as we have seen, provides for the exclusive jurisdiction in the United States not only over the seat of government but over other places purchased with the consent of the legislature of the State for the erection of needful buildings. This power of exclusive legislation carries with it exclusive jurisdiction; the full sovereign authority over such places passes under such circumstances into the hands of the National Government. The State, therefore, can not take cognizance of acts committed there, and the inhabitants of those places cease to be inhabitants of the State and can no longer exercise any civil or political rights under the laws of the State. But land within the limits of a State can be acquired for governmental purposes in other ways than by purchase with the consent of the legislature; and if acquired in any other way exclusive jurisdiction and legislative power do not pass to the United States. The property may be purchased without the consent of the legislature, may be taken under the power of eminent domain, or may be part of territory originally belonging to the United States and not exempted from the jurisdiction of the State at the time of the admission of the State wherein the property lies. In these cases the interest of the United States is that of an ordinary proprietor, but doubtless, under any circumstances, the Federal property, however acquired, would be free from any such interference for Federal purposes. The State may also cede jurisdiction to the Federal Government over any such place, and in doing so may make such restrictions or conditions as it may see fit, provided they are not inconsistent with the effective use of the property for the purposes for which it was acquired."

Upon the question now being discussed the decision of Judge Seaman (71 Fed. Rep., 545) is to the point. The syllabus is:

"The purchase of lands in a State by the General Government with legislative consent does not ipso facto confer upon the General Government exclusive jurisdiction unless the purchase is for a fort or for some other purpose distinctly named in Article I, section 8, of the Constitution; and in order that exclusive jurisdiction may be acquired over land taken for any other purpose, the act providing therefor and calling for the consent must unequivocally declare that exclusive jurisdiction is intended and necessary, or such necessity must be manifest from the purpose of the act."

Judge Seaman, in his opinion, page 552, says:

"It was declared by Chief Justice Spencer, in the great and leading case of People v. Godfrey (17 Johns, 225), as a fundamental principle, 'that the rights of sovereignty are never to be taken away by implication,' and the rule thus stated is an accepted canon in the construction of powers between the nations and State. Reading the Wisconsin statute in the light of this rule, and in the view that the purpose was not one for which exclusive legislation was prescribed, either by the Constitution or by Congressional enactments, the omission of the word 'exclusive,' or some equivocal term, is material, and in my opinion the act must be interpreted as ceding—that is, yielding or surrendering—to the United States such jurisdiction as Congress may find necessary for the object of the cession and for the exercise of which there must be clear enactments to that end within its powers."

The Wisconsin act reads:

"That jurisdiction over the several tracts of land hereinafter mentioned be, and hereby is, ceded to the United States of America."

In 114 U. S., 545, Chicago and Pacific Railway Co. v. McGlinn, the court referred to the point made in the argument of Fort Leavenworth v. Lowe et al., same volume, that the act of cession by the State of Kansas conferred "exclusive" jurisdiction over the territory to the United States and that any limitations in the act were void. The court said, in speaking of Fort Leavenworth v. Lowe et al.:

"We there held that a building on a tract of land owned by the United States used as a fort or for other public purposes of the Federal Government is exempted as an instrumentality of the Government from any such control or interference by the State as will defeat or embarrass its effective use for these purposes. But in order that the United States may possess exclusive legislative power over the tract, except as may be necessary to the use of the building thereon as such instrumentality, they must have acquired the tract by purchase, with the consent of the State. This is the only mode prescribed by the Federal Constitution for their acquisition of exclusive legislative power over it. We also held that it is competent for the legislature of a State to cede exclusive jurisdiction over places needed by the General Government in the execution of its powers."

This case involved a suit against a railroad company on the reservation for killing a cow, brought in the State court of Kansas, under a Kansas statute. The railroad company contended that the Kansas statute was void, because the United States had exclusive legislative power over the reservation and that the limitation in the act of cession was void. The court said, page 546:

"We are clear that this contention can not be maintained. It is a general rule of public law, recognized and acted upon by the United States, that whenever political jurisdiction and legislative power over any territory are transferred from one nation or sovereign to another, the municipal laws of the country—that is, laws which are intended for the protection of private rights—continue in force until abrogated or changed by the new government or sovereign. By the cession public property passes from one government to the other, but private property remains as before, and with it those municipal laws which are designed to secure its peaceful use and enjoyment."

In 146 U. S., 325, Benson v. United States, the Kansas military reservation and the jurisdiction of the United States thereover was again before the Supreme Court, this time in a prosecution before the circuit court of the United States for murder committed on the reservation. The court, on page 331, said:

"It is contended by appellant's counsel that within the scope of those decisions (114 U. S., 525, and 114 U. S., 542) jurisdiction passed to the General Government only over such portions of the reserve as are actually used for military purposes, and that the particular part of the reserve on which the crime charged was committed was used solely for farming purposes. But in matters of that kind the courts follow the action of the political department of the Government. (2 Wall., 525, 537.) The character and purposes of its occupation having been officially and legally established by that branch of the Government which has control over such matters, is not open to the courts, on a question of jurisdiction, to inquire what may be the actual uses to which any portion of the reserve is temporarily put. There was therefore jurisdiction in the circuit court."

In 162 U. S., 390, Palmer v. Barrett, a case from New York, the question arose as to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States over certain lands adjacent to the navy-yard and hospital in Brooklyn that had been ceded with certain limitations to the United States by the State of New York. The case involved a lease. The court said:

"In the absence of any proof to the contrary it is to be considered that the lease was valid and that both parties to it received the benefits stipulated in the contract. This being true, the case then presents the very contingency contemplated by the act of cession—that is, the exclusion from the jurisdiction of the United States of such portion of the ceded land not used for the governmental purposes of the United States therein specified. Assuming, without deciding, that if the cession of jurisdiction to the United States had been free from condition or limitation the land should be treated and considered as within the sole jurisdiction of the United States," etc.

This last clause suggests the doubt heretofore expressed of the existence of unlimited power in the United States to exercise "exclusive" legislative power in a State with the consent of the State. This doubt is strengthened by the following case:

In Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan et al. (3 Howard, 212, 223), the court says, in speaking of the act admitting Alabama into the Union:

"Nothing remained in the United States, according to the terms of the agreement, but the public lands. And if an express stipulation had been inserted in the agreement granting the municipal right of sovereignty and eminent domain to the United States such stipulation would have been void and inoperative, because the United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain within the limits of a State or elsewhere, except in the cases in which it is expressly granted."

The court here quotes Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, and says:

"Within the District of Columbia and the other places purchased and used for the purposes above mentioned the national and municipal powers of government of every description are united in the Government of the Union. And these are the only cases within the United States in which all the powers of government are united in a single government, except in the cases already mentioned in the temporary Territorial governments, and there a local government exists."

The opinion, further, page 224, recites:

"We therefore think the United States hold the public lands within the new States by force of the deeds of cession and the statutes connected with them, and not by any municipal sovereignty which it may be supposed they possess, or have reserved by compact with the new States for that particular purpose. The provision of the Constitution above referred to shows that no such power can be exercised by the United States within a State. Such a power is not only repugnant to the Constitution, but it is inconsistent with the spirit and intention of the deeds of cession."

It should be said of this opinion that the right of "eminent domain," referred to in it, has reference to ultimate ownership and dominion of property rather than to the right to take private property for public uses. It is in the latter sense that the right of "eminent domain" has been so frequently held by the Supreme Court to exist in the United States.

Whatever may be the power of the United States to exercise exclusive legislative power within a State it is not necessary now to determine, nor is it necessary to determine what jurisdiction should be ceded by a State in case the United States purchase forest reserves within its domain. It is quite evident that H. R. 10456 and 10457 do not contemplate that such reserves shall be acquired in any State without the consent of such State, and it is equally evident that these bills do not contemplate that the United States shall exercise exclusive legislative power over such reserves when purchased. These questions therefore are not submitted to the committee. Considering the questions that are presented, there ought to be no difficulty in adjusting the question of power over such reserves between the State and the United States. The Supreme Court said in the Fort Leavenworth v. Lowe case (114 U. S., 541) that "the State and the General Government may deal with each other in any way they may deem best to carry out the purposes of the Constitution."

One of the purposes of the Constitution being to preserve and maintain the use of our navigable rivers as aids to commerce, the State and the Federal Government may agree as they deem best to carry out this great purpose. Such agreement can be expressed in the act of Congress by setting forth therein in detail the particular cessions of jurisdiction by the State that would be required by the United States as a condition precedent to purchasing the reserves, and by also setting forth therein the purpose for which such jurisdiction is required. This purpose should plainly appear to be that of aiding navigation. All other purposes should be eliminated. Such an act of Congress, followed by cession from the State of the required jurisdiction for the purpose stated, would constitute the agreement between the United States and the State and would be clearly within the scope of the Constitution.

IN CONCLUSION.

It is amply apparent from the foregoing statement that Congress has the constitutional power to acquire lands and forest reserves in a State by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, as an aid to navigation, if it be made to appear to Congress that such reserves would materially or substantially aid navigation.

WILLIAM G. BRANTLEY.

We concur in the conclusion of Mr. BRANTLEY.

JOHN H. FOSTER.

E. Y. WEBB.

CHARLES Q. TIRRELL.

HENRY S. CAULFIELD.

I concur with Mr. BRANTLEY in his conclusion that Congress has the constitutional power to acquire lands strictly in the interest of navigation, but as the bills pending before the committee are, in my opinion, not based primarily upon this proposition, I desire to guard against committing myself to the policy which I believe to be involved.

CHAS. C. REID.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I know very well that this scheme will eventually be adopted. I have no doubt about it. Whether it will be at this particular time I have some doubt, because I do not believe the other House will pass it. That remark may be out of order—I think it is—and if so I will withdraw that part of it.

But, Mr. President, I have discovered that whenever there is difficulty anywhere, a matter that ought to be rectified, Congress is the body that is applied to. I have an idea that it was the theory of the Government that the National Government should deal with things the States could not properly do. There are plenty of court decisions to that effect. We have had repeated declarations of that kind by public men for many years; and that is the law, Mr. President, which ought to govern us here.

It is not any answer to me to say timber is being destroyed. It is not any answer to say the soil of the New Hampshire hills is being washed into the valleys. If anybody can protect that timber, it is the State of New Hampshire; if anybody can protect the soil, it is the State of New Hampshire; and when you take away from the State the opportunity to do that you minimize and destroy the right of the State.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to let this matter rest where it is. I do not believe I will make any further discussion of it; I will yield to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], if he wants to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have very little familiarity with the pending bill. I understand that it provides for the acquisition by the General Government of the White Mountain forests, which are the source of the Merrimac and Connecticut and other rivers in New England, and of the Appalachian Mountains, which are the source of most of the rivers of Virginia; all of the rivers, I believe, of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, and most of the rivers of Alabama and Tennessee.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] objects to the bill, and he states that the national purpose for which these forests are to be acquired, namely, the promotion of navigation as part of interstate and foreign commerce, is a mere pretense; that the real purpose of their acquisition is to use them for timber supply, for pleasure resorts, and for the development of water power in manufacture, and he refers in confirmation of this to the hearings in the House committee, where various citizens appeared, testifying to the uses to which these forests could be put. He also refers in terms of criticism to the legislation of the various States affected, South as well as North, granting to the National Government a certain jurisdiction over these forests in case they should be acquired.

Mr. President, so far as the statutes of the States are concerned in which these various cessions are made, it does not seem to me that they are properly before us now. It may be, as the Senator says, that these various States had not the power to grant anything to the National Government; that they had no power to give it a power where none existed or to make cessions of jurisdiction.

That may all be true, but I suggest that the question before us is whether the National Government has the power under the Constitution to acquire these forests, not whether the States can cede to the National Government such power or can cede it jurisdiction over the lands acquired.

So the question is not whether the people of these various States wish to promote other interests, such as pleasure resorts, timber supply, and manufactures. All those may be incidentally promoted by the preservation of a forest, whether that forest be preserved by the States or by the nation. The question simply before us is, whether the nation has the power to acquire these forests in the interest of interstate and foreign commerce and of the navigation of the rivers which form so important a part of this commerce.

If the power exists, I imagine that Congress is the judge as to when and to what extent it will exercise the power, and the mere failure in discretion will not invalidate the act. But is it possible that there is any failure of discretion in this contemplated act?

Are there any considerations which should be addressed to us as legislators regarding the policy of this act, the power of acquisition being conceded?

I contend there can be no question that wise public policy requires that the nation should move in this matter, and not leave the action entirely to the individual States. I would welcome the cooperation of the States in this great movement. I trust that in this great scheme of internal improvement the energies of the States will be aroused as well as the energies of the National Government.

But a State can only act within its own boundaries, and nature has had no regard whatever for the artificial boundaries of States in its distribution of our rivers. These rivers are rarely, almost never, within the boundaries of a single State, and sometimes they constitute the boundaries between great States.

So it is utterly impossible for any individual State to take up the problem in any comprehensive way, and if the States are to act at all they must act in unison and in cooperation with each other. It does seem to me that the Union of States was organized for the purpose of bringing about cooperative action within the powers granted, and if we can find a power granted that will cover this case the best method of accomplishing cooperation between the States is through the action of the National Congress under the power granted in the Constitution.

Now, that power is the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and under that power, according to the statement of the Senator from Colorado, the National Government has an easement upon every river in the country that is either navigable or capable of being made navigable. I will venture to say we can go further than that; that it has an easement and control over every river that is not navigable, provided such river is tributary to a navigable river and the treatment of that river by scientific methods will promote the navigability of the main river into which it empties.

So the power of the National Government not only extends to those parts that are navigable and those parts that are capable of being made navigable, but it is carried to the remote sources of the streams themselves and the very springs from which they arise, if it can be proved that the control of those sources is essential to the control of the main river itself for the purposes of navigation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the pending measure had the consideration of the Inland-Waterways Commission, and do they approve of this legislation?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, we have not had either of these specific propositions before us. The Commission has simply taken up the general problems relating to forest preservation as a part of the development of our waterways, and the opinion is, I think, unanimous that one of the most essential parts of stream treatment and control is the conservation of the waters in these great forests, holding the flood waters and preventing them from being precipitated rapidly into the streams, thus increasing the floods and impeding commerce.

Mr. President, so far as the Appalachian Mountains are concerned, we have the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Pennsylvania interested. These mountains are the sources of almost all the rivers that are either navigable or capable of being made navigable in those States, some of the rivers flowing toward the west into the Gulf of Mexico and the others flowing east into the Atlantic Ocean.

Now, how have we treated those rivers thus far? Most unscientifically. The bulk of the expenditure of the nation in the promotion of navigation has been on the rivers which have their sources in the Appalachian Mountains, and the treatment has consisted in what? In flood prevention? No. In the prevention of the erosion of the soil? In a very slight degree. The treatment has consisted in taking out of the rivers by the process of dredging the sand and silt deposited in the rivers during the periods of flood.

What has scientific experience demonstrated as the best method of treating these rivers? The prevention of the floods themselves, the prevention of the erosion of the soil, the prevention of the destruction of the banks, so that the sand and silt may not be deposited in the rivers to be afterwards taken out by the process of dredging.

Flood control, then, is absolutely essential. It is familiar to us all that these forest areas when denuded of their trees rapidly precipitate the waters that fall upon the lands into the tributaries of these great rivers, and the waters are thus forced into the main rivers and create the destructive floods; and they deposit the sand and silt and alluvial soil in the channels of the rivers, whence they are gradually carried into the bays, gulfs, and sounds of the coasts, where they are obstructive to navigation.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I understand the Senator, for the reasons which he has just stated, contends that this is constitutional legislation under the commerce clause.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. I suggest to the Senator a stronger ground on which to plant the constitutionality. It has been suggested that it should be planted on the right of the General Government to maintain post-roads. The floods washing down the mountain sides make gulleys in the roads, undermine the roads, and make it dangerous for the stage drivers to drive along the roads at night. Clearly it is within the constitutional competency of Congress to protect the stage drivers on a post-road, and I should think that that was a better ground upon which to base the constitutionality of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think I can give the Senator from Nevada a much stronger reason for the constitutionality of the bill than the Senator from Oregon has in his suggestion about the stage drivers and the bad roads of his part of the country.

Mr. FULTON. No, Mr. President, not in my part of the country, but in the particular part of the country to which the bill applies and to which it is addressed. Besides, these post-roads extend over the mountains, and unquestionably the floods are approximately the cause of any injury that results to the roads.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will honor us with a visit to the White Mountains of New Hampshire he will find roads there as good as there are in the world, and he will find upon inquiry that the State of New Hampshire has constructed those roads.

Mr. President, I want the attention of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], because he is going to discuss the constitutionality of this measure, and I want him to know the facts. More than a year ago in the agricultural appropriation bill this provision was put in the bill:

And to report to Congress the area and natural conditions of said watersheds—

That is, the watersheds of the Appalachian and White Mountain regions—

the price at which the same can be purchased by the Government, and the advisability of the Government purchasing and setting apart the same as national forest reserves for the purpose of conserving and regulating the water supply and flow of said streams in the interest of agriculture, water power, and navigation.

Congress took that action more than a year ago, and acting upon that, the investigation has been made, out of which investigation has grown the bill that is now before Congress.

If the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] will bear with me a moment longer, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has called attention to the opinion of the chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, I want to read a few sentences that were concurred in by several members of that committee. In commenting upon this provision in the agricultural bill, this gentleman says:

The important thing here to be observed is that the Fifty-ninth Congress in ordering said survey distinctly directed that information be furnished as to the advisability of acquiring the proposed forest reserves, not as an end in itself, but as a means to other specified ends, to wit, "for the purpose of conserving and regulating the water supply and flow of said streams in the interest of agriculture, water power, and navigation."

It is a just assumption that the Fifty-ninth Congress felt authorized in appropriating money for this survey, and it is to be noted that one of the ends sought to be achieved by the survey, whatever may be said of the others, was clearly within the constitutional power of Congress, and that end is the conserving and regulating the water supply of certain streams in the interest of navigation. I have examined the report of the Secretary of Agriculture made in pursuance of said direction of the Fifty-ninth Congress. The same is embraced in Senate Document No. 91, Sixtieth Congress, first session. In this report the Secretary states, among other things, that "all the waters gathered by the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains flows to the sea through navigable rivers," and he submits an argument supported by facts presented by him that the preservation of the forests in these mountains would equalize the flow of these rivers, tending to the avoidance of floods and freshets and to a greater volume of water in time of drought.

I owe an apology to the Senator from Nevada for taking so much of his time, but as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] raised the question, rather jocularly, as to the constitutional right of this proposed legislation, I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that Congress more than a year ago, in the provision which I have read, provided for this investigation along constitutional lines.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada if he can tell us about how long it will be before this Inland Waterways Commission will be able to furnish Congress any solution of these difficult problems? The country is awaiting, with more or less expectancy, a report from that Commission. I should like to know whether such a report is likely to reach Congress in time to act upon this bill intelligently at this session or will it be received later on?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state that before the Inland Waterways Commission made its report and at the very commencement of its deliberations after its investigation of the last summer I introduced in the Senate a bill, No. 560, which I presented tentatively, as representing my individual views upon the subject. In that bill I provided for an inland waterway fund of $50,000,000, which is to be reinforced whenever reduced below $20,000,000 by a bond issue. I also provided in that bill for the coordination of the various scientific surveys of the Government in the development of this work, and also for the appointment of a commission of experts—a board of experts—by the President with full power not only to make plans, but to act and to commence immediately the construction of the various projects which they recommended after their approval by the President of the United States.

The bill also provided for cooperation with the various States in these matters. So that where there were any questions relating to the development of rivers that could not be, as a matter of national power, undertaken by the National Government itself, they could be undertaken by the State governments and by corporations and by individuals, so that we would have everybody—the National Government, the State governments, corporations, and individuals, whoever had any right or interest in the stream—at work in the matter of the development of these rivers for every purpose to which they could be put in civilized society, including, of course, navigation, which is the only power under which the nation could act.

I would prefer not to go into that question at any length, because I understand that the chairman of the committee is desirous of having a vote upon the bill this afternoon, and I do not wish to absorb too much time. I shall present my views regarding the inland-waterways bill when I move the Senate to take up the modified bill which was introduced by me the other day, which provides for the continuance of this Commission and a small fund for expenses. I simply wish to say a word more upon this matter.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to get the judgment of the Senator from Nevada. I understand this measure contemplates an expenditure of something over $20,000,000—$5,000,000 in this bill and looking to fifteen or twenty million dollars later on—in order to carry out the project under the report that was made by the Commission which has investigated it. I understand further that the Senator from Nevada is very much in earnest in his desire to get a permanent inland waterways commission, which shall investigate and pass upon the necessities of the Government in regard to water transportation. I understand further that that Commission, which has been working for some time, has not yet made any report upon this project.

Now, I want to ask the Senator from Nevada if, in his judgment, it is not the wiser course, before entering upon this expenditure of $20,000,000, to wait until we shall have a favorable report, if it be favorable, of the expert Commission upon this project.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to suggest to the Senator from Nevada that, so far as I know, there is no proposition to spend $20,000,000; but there is a proposition to buy what land we can in the White Mountains and in the Appalachian Mountain country for $5,000,000. After that has been administered under the provisions of this bill, if the Department suggests that further action be taken and more money appropriated, then it will be a matter for some future Congress to determine.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, if the Senator will bear with me there—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am ready to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, in that view of the case I can not see any reason for this appropriation of $5,000,000, because, if this bill is justified, it is justified in view of the report which has been made by the Commission appointed to examine this project. If anything is justified to be done under this project, it is to expend the twenty or twenty-odd million dollars which will be required to make it successful. I understand perfectly well, as the Senator states, that it is not a proposition—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to suggest to the Senator that I think the proposition of acquiring the territory as described in this bill is one that antedates the Commission of which he speaks, by which so large an amount of money is to be ultimately expended.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is true, and nobody was able to form any idea of what the cost of the proposition was. One of the purposes of the appointment of this Commission was to ascertain the cost of the project and whether it can be properly carried out. We have the report of this Commission, in which they say that they have not been able to get an estimate of the amounts for which the land can be bought, but from what they have ascertained as to the value placed upon the lands and what they can be obtained for by condemnation proceedings, they believe, I think, that it would amount to $20,000,000.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, it seems to me, with the permission of the Senator from Nevada—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It seems that the Senator from Wyoming has put an entirely erroneous construction upon the proposition. He seems to want the Senate to infer that unless Congress shall decide in future to spend $15,000,000 more this $5,000,000 that we shall probably to-day authorize to be spent will have been wasted.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is just exactly it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is nothing to that, in my opinion; for if they spend, say, $5,000,000 for certain portions of the land at the head of certain streams, and it does protect and preserve the navigability of those streams, I do not see any waste about it; but if the experiment is proven to be successful and future Congresses want to go further, they can do so, but if the experiment should be a failure, then, of course, the money would be lost, though it would not be $20,000,000; it would be $5,000,000.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut, in view of his explanation, if it would not be wiser for us to embark upon the expenditure of the $5,000,000 proposed in this bill than to appropriate the entire $20,000,000, because if the expenditure of the $5,000,000 does not conserve the interest of the navigability of these streams it would be an argument for not appropriating the additional $15,000,000?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Precisely. The grievance of the Senator from Wyoming is that we are not wasting enough money, as I understand.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I must decline to be interrupted further.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Wyoming has no grievance. He simply rose to ask the judgment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] put a question to me, which I assume was facetious, and to which he hardly expects a serious reply. So far as the Senator—

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I must decline to yield further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada declines to yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator from Oregon that I assured the Senator from Connecticut a short time ago that I would not exhaust much time. I know he is anxious to get on with his bill, and I want to proceed with my remarks. So I must decline to yield.

Mr. FULTON. I must express the hope that the Senator will reform his judgment touching my purpose in asking the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, as to the inquiry of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I understood the Senator to ask whether it would not be better to postpone action upon this bill until after the Inland Waterways Commission, of which I am a member, can consider this project and report upon it. I wish to say to him that I think he misconceives the purpose and function of the Inland Waterways Commission. It has no foundation in statute at all. It is not a body of experts authorized by statute to pass upon these questions.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senator refers to some kind of a commission, which he terms the "Inland Waterways Commission." What legally constituted commission is that? What real tribunal is it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator from Maine that that Commission has not the authority of any statute passed by the Congress of the United States. It exists simply by the personal selection of the President as advisory to him in recommending to Congress a plan of legislation, his power being derived from that provision of the Constitution which gives him the right to make recommendations to Congress. Of course included in that right is the right to seek information anywhere, to call upon individuals or call upon the people collectively, or to appoint a committee or a commission for that purpose purely advisory to himself. He selected as members of that Commission the Chief of the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Chief of the Reclamation Service, the Chief of the Forestry Service, a member of the Bureau of Soils, the Chief of the Bureau of Corporations, the chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. BURTON of Ohio], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who had been the leading minority member of that committee in the House, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], and myself.

Of that Commission Mr. BURTON was made chairman. I will state that I was quite surprised when I received a letter from the President requesting me to serve upon this Commission, as I represented a State that had no navigable waters. I assumed, however, that the reason for my selection was that in formulating this plan the President desired to avail himself of the experience of one who was interested in irrigation and who had had something to do with the legislation upon that subject, and that the consideration of irrigation was necessary in the study of stream control, the purpose of the inquiry being to co-ordinate the action of all the scientific branches of the Government relating to water under one plan of legislation, so they could all work harmoniously for the development of these rivers.

Mr. HALE. What I am waiting for is for the Senator to tell me—he refers to this as the Inland Waterways Commission—how it became constituted a commission, because a commission is always understood, and ought to be understood, as a real, legally constituted body, with defined powers, which make it an active, operative commission, and I was asking the Senator, who knows a great deal more about it than I do, what created this a commission?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Simply the personal selection by the President of certain men whom he thought qualified to aid him in the preparation of a plan of legislation upon this great subject which, if he approved, he could recommend to Congress.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, did the members of this body receive a commission, a certificated appointment, something that carried with it legal powers? It was something more than an invitation to appear, I suppose, at a certain time and confer together. It being called a Commission—I am not disposed to belittle it, for it is an extremely important subject-matter—my theory, with some experience in Congress, is that a commission is something more than a meeting of certain gentlemen together to talk things over. A commission is, or should be, a legally constituted body, and I was only asking the Senator what it was that made this a legally constituted body.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will let me make my answer, I will state that if it is necessary that a commission should have the authority of a statute passed by Congress, then he is entirely right in the assumption that it is a misnomer to call this a commission, but I do not understand that that is the definition of a commission. It has been the custom, as I understand, of the President to appoint an advisory committee or commission of this kind to consider questions that he has in view regarding legislation, with a view to aiding him in the preparation of a plan and recommendation to Congress. He might call it a committee, he might call it a commission, he might call it a board, but it has never been contended, of course, that this has the sanction of Congressional action. I will state—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me one moment, I will state that, as a member of this Commission to which the Senator refers, I received no commission, as I understand. I received a personal letter from the President, stating his purpose, and asking me whether I would act upon this Commission, with a view to preparing this plan of legislation.

At first I had some doubt as to whether I, as a member of a legislative body, could with propriety serve upon such a commission. I felt satisfied, of course, that I could not serve upon an executive commission or a commission organized by Congress for the purpose of discharging executive duties, such as a board of experts for the purpose of considering and executing projects would be; and so I was in some doubt; but I came to the conclusion that under the power granted by the Constitution to the President of making recommendations to Congress it was entirely within his province to ask for aid and seek aid or information anywhere, with a view to facilitating his labors, and that it would be entirely appropriate for me to act upon this commission in this advisory way.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will permit me just a moment with reference to the question asked by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. The Senator from Maine, of course, is technically correct, and yet such a commission, in the real meaning of the term, not the technical meaning of the term, although without any Congressional sanction, might afterwards be ratified and accomplish a very great public good, as, for example, the Commission that settled the questions involved in the anthracite coal strike, which, if I remember correctly—and if I do not some Senator will correct me—was appointed in precisely the way the Inland Waterways Commission was. They not only were appointed, but they sat and had hearings; they examined all the testimony involved; they made a finding, and they settled the strike and cleared up the entire difficulty, which was too grave and far-reaching and serious to have awaited Congressional action, because it was on hand at that moment. So wise were the conclusions of the Commission that afterwards when Congress met, as I remember, they ratified the action of that Commission by voting a compensation to the commissioners. That is an illustration of the substantial nature of a commission after all, although it might not technically be established by law. I am much obliged to the Senator from Nevada for yielding to me.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask the pardon of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] for allowing this discussion to be injected into this debate, because I know that it delays the consideration of his bill, but—

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, will the Senator bear with me a moment to ask him a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS (continuing). I will be very brief and will add only a few remarks on the bill before the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will bear with me for another question—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask whether there has been any definite statement made anywhere of the functions of this important Commission to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is a statement made in the message of the President in which he said that he had appointed this committee or commission to consider this plan of legislation; that they had made a partial report; that it was highly desirable that the work of the Commission should continue, and that it should receive the sanction of law in order, I imagine, that the expenses of the Commission might be paid. I will state that, so far as I am individually concerned, I would never receive compensation for my services in connection with this work, but there are other members of the Commission who are not members of the legislative body, who, I think, ought to receive some compensation.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are evidently acting in cooperation with the governors. There are no governors on the commission, as I understand.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There are no governors on the Commission. Now, Mr. President, regarding this particular bill, I wish to say that the control of the stream flow is of the highest importance to navigation. It is important that a full and equal flow should be maintained, not a spasmodic flow, not a flow of floods at certain seasons and of a stream reduced to a mere thread at other seasons. It is of the highest importance that there should be an equal flow, and for this reason it is essential that storage should be accomplished in some way. Storage can be accomplished by artificial reservoirs or it can be accomplished by the acquisition of natural reservoirs. The forest is such a natural reservoir, for when the lands are stripped of their forests, waters falling upon them rush into the streams and increase their flow, destroy the banks, deposit sand and silt in the rivers, which constitute obstructions to navigation. So that a proper stream control involves not only the preservation and the conservation of the forests, but the prevention of soil erosion, the prevention of the destruction of banks by a system of bank revetments and levees, and the reclamation of swamp lands themselves in a measure; for the construction of levees with a view to stream control necessarily involves the reclamation of swamp lands adjoining. So all these problems are involved.

But the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] asked me why I am willing to support this project when evidently this entire scheme of legislation involves full and comprehensive plans that will involve the irrigation of arid lands at the sources of these rivers, the preservation of forests, the protection of banks, the development of water power through the construction of dams and the reclamation of swamp lands. My answer is that I prefer a comprehensive plan, but thus far I have been unable to get a bill out of the Committee on Commerce; and I therefore deem it advisable, whenever an individual project comes up as meritorious as this is, to support it and to help put it through, for there can be no question whatever but that the purchase and preservation and conserving of these forests will be absolutely essential to any scheme of waterway development to be entered upon in the future, however comprehensive the plan may be. So I am heartily in favor of this bill as an entering wedge in this comprehensive scheme of waterway development.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says that we have always been attending to waterways heretofore, and that there is no more movement in this direction now than there has been. I think the Senator is oblivious to the signs of the times. I am sure that wherever I have been during the last summer I have found people in every section alive upon this question. They have been holding local conventions in every part of the Union; they have organized water associations on the Pacific coast; they have organized the Mississippi River Association, the Upper Mississippi River Association, the Missouri River Association, the Deepwater to the Gulf Association, the Atlantic Coast Waterways Association, and all of these conventions, including the Rivers and Harbors Congress, have been meeting during the past year and have been giving expression to a public sentiment upon the subject which is intense. The country at large is not satisfied with the action of Congress in the past. We have spent nearly $500,000,000 in the development of our waterways, and have done it ineffectively, simply because we have had no broad and comprehensive plan into which everything relating to the development of these rivers for every beneficial purpose could be dovetailed.

It will not be until we adopt such a plan, involving the co-ordination of all the scientific services and bureaus of the Government that have any relation to water, and involving the cooperation of the States and municipalities, so far as their powers and their interests lie, that we can hope to have the complete development of our waterways for every purpose to which civilization can put them, one of the most important, of course, being navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce.

I do not contend for one moment that the nation has any power in this matter outside of the interstate-commerce clause, but in that way it has the greatest interest in these rivers. Whatever we may say about the jurisdiction of the States and the rights of the States, whatever we may say about the powers and rights of riparian owners, it is apparent that the nation, having an easement in every navigable stream and in every river capable of being made navigable and in the tributary streams to those rivers which can be made navigable as a part of the stream control, has a larger interest in these rivers than any of the States or all of the States combined, or any of the municipalities or all of the bank owners, or all of them combined. It is essential, therefore, that the nation should enter into cooperation with all in this great work.

Mr. President, the people have evidenced in every way their intense feeling on this subject. Senators will find in the platforms of both parties during the next campaign the most emphatic expressions upon this subject. There is a feeling that Congress has been lagging upon this question; that Congress is guilty of inertia and apathy and indifference; and the only answer that can be made to the charge is that Congress rarely creates public opinion, but always responds to public opinion, and when public opinion becomes sufficiently definite and demonstrated Congress always acts. The time for action has now come, because public opinion has been formed. There is no question about it. I would have been glad if the comprehensive plan which I presented to Congress early in the session, and which has been debated upon this floor and which has been presented to the Committee on Commerce, and which has in its main and essential features the approval of the Secretary of War and of the Inland Waterways Commission and of the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, could have been put upon the statute books at this session. But with the pressure of business, realizing it would be impossible to get this great and comprehensive plan fully before Congress, I introduced a lesser measure, providing simply for a continuance of the Commission and for its expenses not exceeding $20,000. I have endeavored to secure consideration of this lesser bill by unanimous consent, but objection has been made. I shall at the earliest moment move the Senate for the present consideration of this bill, in order that the sanction of Congress may be given to the investigation already inaugurated by the action of the President.

Mr. NEWLANDS appended to his remarks the following remarks of Mr. Bryan at the Conference on the Conservation of Natural Resources, May 15, 1908:

REMARKS OF MR. BRYAN.

I acknowledge my obligation to President Roosevelt for the opportunity which he has given me to participate in this meeting. The conference marks the beginning of a new era, during which increasing attention will be given to the far-reaching problems involved—in the conservation of the nation's resources. The epoch-making speech with which the Chief Executive opened the first session must exert a powerful influence upon the country at large, as it has upon those who were fortunate enough to hear him.

The assembling of the governors of nearly all the forty-six States in itself an historic event of the first magnitude, for this meeting, and the future meetings which this one assures, will facilitate cooperation between the States, make easier the doing of those things which should be done by the National Government, and stimulate the several States to act more speedily and with better information upon the things which should be done by the States independently. There has been some difference of opinion as to the relative spheres of the nation and the State, but such discussions as we have had here will help to define these spheres and to harmonize conflicting opinions.

I am a strict constructionist if that means to believe that the Federal Government is one of delegated powers and that constitutional limitations should be carefully observed. I am jealous of any encroachment upon the rights of the States believing that the States are as indestructible as the Union is indissoluble. It is, however, entirely consistent with this theory to believe, as I do believe, that it is just as imperative that the General Government shall discharge the duties delegated to it, as it is that the States shall exercise the powers reserved to them.

There is no twilight zone between the nation and the State, in which exploiting interests can take refuge from both, and my observation is that most—not all, but most—of the contentions over the line between nation and State are traceable to predatory corporations which are trying to shield themselves from deserved punishment, or endeavoring to prevent needed restraining legislation. The first point which I desire to make is that earnest men, with an unselfish purpose, and concerned only for the public good, will be able to agree upon legislation which will not only preserve for the future the inheritance which we have received from a bountiful Providence, but preserve it in such a way as to avoid the dangers of centralization. Nothing that is necessary is impossible; and it would be a reflection upon the intelligence, as well as upon the patriotism of our people, to doubt the value of gatherings of this kind.

The time allotted to each speaker is so short that instead of attempting to discuss the various questions presented I shall content myself with a few suggestions in line with the very able papers that have been presented by the specialists who have appeared before us. I begin with the proposition that it should be our purpose not only to preserve the nation's resources for future generations by reducing waste to a minimum, but that we should see to it that a few of the people do not monopolize that which is in equity the property of all the people. The earth belongs to each generation, and it is as criminal to fetter future generations with perpetual franchises, making the multitude servants to a favored fraction of the population, as it would be to unnecessarily impair the common store. I am glad that Secretary Garfield emphasizes this point. It is one that must always be kept in mind by the nation and by the several States.

The first national asset is to be found in the life of the people, and Mr. Mitchell very properly and with great force pointed out the importance of safeguarding the life, the limbs, and the health of those who are engaged in converting the nation's natural resources into material wealth. I would go a step further and say that we could well afford to include in the appropriations made by Congress a sum sufficient to carry on necessary investigations into the cause of diseases national in their scope, and to stimulate the search for remedies which would add to the life, health, and usefulness of the whole population.

I was surprised at the statistics given in regard to our coal and our iron ore. While it is possible that new coal measures and new ore beds may be discovered, we can not afford to base our conduct upon speculations as to what may yet be discovered. We should begin an intelligent supervision and conservation of that which is known to exist, and I respectfully submit that it is worth while to ask ourselves whether we can afford to offer a bounty to those who are engaged in exhausting the supply of raw materials, which when gone can not be replaced. Surely if there is any importation which we can properly encourage by a free list, it is the importation of those raw materials of which our own supply is limited. And what I say in regard to coal and iron ore is equally applicable to timber. It is hardly consistent to discourage the importation of lumber, while we worry about the devastation of our forests.

Mr. Hill has rendered the conference a real service in presenting the facts and statistics set forth in his address on land and its cultivation. Few of us, probably, were conscious of the impairment of the crop value of our soil. I am sure that a clear understanding of this subject will lead to a still further enlargement of the work of the Department of Agriculture and to still closer cooperation between the Department of Agriculture and the States in teaching economical methods of agriculture. Already the rapid growth of the agricultural college offers encouragement, and I am glad to express my appreciation of the valuable work done by Secretary Wilson and his associates in bringing to our country fruits, plants, and grasses suited to the different parts of our country. As the farmer pays more than his share of the taxes and receives less than his share of the direct benefits which flow from national appropriations, it is only justice to him that we shall be liberal in the support of every effort put forth for the improvement of agriculture.

Irrigation has justified the arguments which led to the inauguration of the work. No one who has witnessed the transformation of the desert into field and garden can doubt the wisdom of the steps that have been taken. Here, as elsewhere, both the nation and the State can find a field for legitimate activity, and I am sure that there will be a continuation of this work until all of the waters which can be utilized for that purpose have been appropriated.

The same principle which was invoked in support of irrigation can be invoked in support of drainage. The question is not whether the water should be brought upon the land or taken off the land; it is whether the land shall be made tillable and its wealth-producing qualities utilized. Drainage of the swamps is, therefore, as legitimate a work as the reclamation of arid wastes.

No subject has been brought out more prominently at this conference than the subject of forestry, and it justifies the time devoted to it, for our timber lands touch our national interests at several points. Our use of lumber is enormous, but immense as would be the inconvenience and loss caused by the absence of lumber the consequence of the destruction of our forests would be still more disastrous to the nation. As has been shown, the timber on our mountain ranges protects our water supply. Not to speak of changes in climate which might follow the denuding of our mountains, the loss to the irrigated country could not be remedied and the damage to the streams could not be calculated. And if this is not enough to arouse the interest of all, I may add that the destruction of the forests on the mountain ranges would in time impair the underflow upon which we rely for our well water.

The good effects of this conference are already apparent in the determination expressed by several governors to at once appoint forestry commissions and begin such work as the State can do. In this case action is so urgent and the field to be covered so large that both the nation and the several States can exercise themselves to the full without danger of doing too much. The national reservations already made in the West and the new reservations that ought to be made and are likely to be made in the White Mountains and in the Appalachian Range can doubtless be so administered as to protect national interests without unduly burdening the States in which the reservations are located, or needlessly interfering with the development of the States. No national policy need retard the development of the Western States, and their own interests would restrain them from sacrificing future wealth and protection for temporary advantage.

Lastly, I come to our interior waterways. I shall not defend the improvement of these waterways on the ground that such improvement would help to regulate the railroad rates, although it would aid regulation, for regulation can be secured by legislation whenever the people are ready to exercise the power which they have. But water traffic is less expensive than traffic by rail, and there are many commodities which can be transported much more cheaply by water than they could possibly be carried on land. I believe it has been estimated that an expenditure of $500,000,000 on interior waterways would result in a saving of nearly $200,000,000 annually.

If this saving were equally divided between the producers and the consumers it would be an enormous profit to both, and Mr. Carnegie has pointed out that water transportation, by requiring less iron and less coal in proportion to the freight carried, would enable us to postpone the exhaustion of our iron mines and our coal beds.

The development of water transportation is essentially a national project, because the water courses run by and through many States. And yet, as has been pointed out, it would be possible for the States to do a certain amount of developing along this line if they were permitted to avail themselves of the use of the water power that could be developed.

Just a word in conclusion about an investment in permanent improvements. Money spent in care for the life and health of the people, in protecting the soil from erosion and from exhaustion, in preventing waste in the use of minerals of a limited supply, in the reclamation of deserts and of swamps, and in the preservation of forests still remaining and the replanting of denuded tracts—money invested in these and in the development of waterways and in the deepening of harbors, is an investment yielding an annual return. If any of these expenditures fail to bring a return at once, the money expended is like a bequest to those who come after it. And as the parent lives for his child, as well as for himself, so the citizen provides for the future as well as for the present. This gathering will be remembered by future generations because they, as well as ourselves, will be the recipients of the benefits which will flow from this conference. We have all been strengthened by communion together; our vision has been enlarged, and the enthusiasm here aroused will permeate every State and every community.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I expect to vote for this bill, and I will preface my remarks by reading a few words from a recent writer on this subject:

In fifty years we shall have whole States as bare as China. The Appalachians will be stripped to bed rock. The Rockies will send down vast floods, which can not be controlled. The Canadian forests north of the Great Lakes will be swept away. Our Middle West will be bare. The Yazoo Delta will be ripped apart, because no levee will be able to stand the floods of those days. We shall be living in crowded concrete houses and at double the rent we now pay. We shall make vehicles of steel; use no wood on our farms. We shall pay 10 cents for a newspaper; 50 cents for a magazine; as much for a lead pencil. Cotton will be immensely higher. Beef will be the privilege of the few. Clothing will cost twice what it costs to-day. Like Chinamen, our children will rake the soil for fuel or forage or food. We shall shiver in a cold and burn in a heat never before felt in this temperate zone, meant by God as a comfortable growing place for splendid human beings, unless we wake up.

This, Mr. President, is the greswome prophecy of Emerson Hough in a magazine article in which he sentimentously states what is the foreshadowing as to the condition of our country if we allow it to be dried up by the denudation of its forests.

There are some facts related in his article which tend to support his views, amongst them that 100,000 acres of timber are cut over every day; that one-half is used by the railroads; that last year 40,000,000 feet B. M. of lumber were consumed; that 100,000,000 ties a year are under contribution from the woods; that 70,000,000,000 feet of telegraph poles were subtracted, and so on as to other drafts upon our resources of timber which are daily, hourly, consuming this portion of our heritage.

It is said that at the foundation of the Government one-half of the country was in forests, and that half of that half has gone. As the pace of our consumption has rapidly broadened and increased, it may be instantly recognized that if we have consumed a half of our forests in a little over a hundred years the great multiplication of our population, of our inventions, and of the articles which we consume, will make the next fifty years as great a source of devastation as the one hundred years past.

Mr. President, this is the primary fact that underlies this bill. It is true that many of the reports and essays on this subject speak of timber as if timber were the main thing aimed at in the bill. It concerns the forests, but the forests in the particular relation which they have to water and the water in the particular relation that it has to navigation. It concerns a subject which is a necessary means to an end. The end is navigation; the means, the preservation of the waters that we may have navigation, and the preservation of the forests that we may get water.

Out West we are turning water into the deserts, and the dry land is growing up in fields and in gardens and increasing the products for the use of man. Here, as in the West, we must commence with the forests in order to get the water, and it is for this reason that I regard this bill as constitutional.

I always listen with the greatest respect to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] for his learning, his intellect, and for the steadiness with which he pursues a sincere conviction, but we can not always agree with anybody, and on this occasion I find myself, with all deference, disagreeing with him. I will read from a case with which he is familiar. It is the case of The United States v. The Rio Grande Irrigation Company, decided by the United States Supreme Court. The opinion in that case, delivered by Judge Brewer, was unanimously concurred in, and it reviews briefly, but clearly, the relations of the State and the Federal Government to its navigable streams. Out in Colorado the legislature had changed the common-law rule as to streams within the dominion of that State, and the Supreme Court recognized its authority to do so, but said these words of limitation:

Two limitations must be recognized: First, that in the absence of specific authority from Congress a State can not by its legislation destroy the right of the United States, as the owner of lands bordering on a stream, to the continued flow of its waters; so far at least as may be necessary for the beneficial uses of the Government property.

And then:

Second, that it is limited by the superior power of the General Government to secure the uninterrupted navigability of all navigable streams within the limits of the United States.

And then this sentence:

In other words, the jurisdiction of the General Government over interstate commerce and its natural highways vests in that Government the right to take all needed measures to preserve the navigability of the navigable water courses of the country even against any State action.

This is a necessary corollary to the sole power that exists in the Government of the United States to regulate commerce. That is a complete power. There is no rival in its exercise. It is simply impossible for the States to do it, and it is conferred in specific words by the fundamental law of the United States. Under that power this Government has dug many a canal. It is daily building harbors and docks. It is turning the courses of rivers into canals. It may make a highway on land or it may make a highway of water. The highways of water dry up unless constantly fed by the vital sources that supply them. When they dry up, they then fill up and nothing but the dry parched earth remains where once flowed a stream bearing commerce.

As the United States Government may build a railroad between States—and it has been so expressly decided by the United States Supreme Court in a thorough analysis and comment on that subject—so it can not be denied by a legislative body which at almost every session of Congress provides for opening the channels of rivers, for building levees on rivers, for protecting our water courses as the cheapest and best of all the media of our interstate commerce and travel.

Now, then, I ask the Senator from Colorado how else could he suggest that the United States might preserve these natural water courses and keep water in them if not by pursuing the course which the scientists of our country, none dissenting, have urged, by preserving the natural storehouses which supply the water to the water courses?

Mr. President, while I have very briefly stated these views, I think I have touched the very center of this question. It is suggested by another gentleman that we may build lakes in the mountains, storage houses for the waters that fall from the skies—artificial ones. Is it not a simpler method to preserve the natural ones? There are thousands of places where you can not make the arrangements to store the water and where the water does not exist to be stored. If it is a more natural way, if it is an easier way, if it is more practicable to preserve the forests which are nature's storehouses of water, certainly they can not be interdicted by those who recommend us to build those that are purely artificial.

Plenty makes waste. By nature this country was stored with the most boundless supply of natural resources of any land which man has tenanted. But our growth has been rapid. Plenty has made waste. When a field along the eastern shores of our country was exhausted the inhabitant and cultivator thereof often could find a better one a few miles west, and a continuous stream of population has gone into the land from here to California, until we have reached a period when we can see the beginning of the end of our boundless resources. It is out of necessity that economy is born, and the whole nation has now to turn its attention to economizing the resources that remain to us and to bring into play the unused powers of our Constitution, that the public means and energies may be applied to that end.

I am not one of those who recommend the searching of the Constitution in order to avoid what is its plain and obvious meaning. It should be construed naturally, as men construe the language of life in their ordinary affairs, and should be taken and administered in the true sense in which its authors uttered it. But I do not think that this is a straining of the Constitution. I know that when Jefferson was pondering the acquisition of Louisiana he was a very strict constructionist of the powers of the Federal Government under the Federal Constitution. He gravely doubted whether this country had the power. But the exigency was so great, the opportunity was so tempting, that as great a mind as his and as conscientious a statesman as he was yielded to the obvious arguments that appealed to the whole country. That mighty domain in the West, which has become the homes of millions of people, is a sufficient vindication of the action of the United States, without attempting to strain the meaning of the Constitution to bar the people from its obvious destiny.

We have to save our forests if we can do so honestly and in the line of thought of our Constitution; unless all the great jurists who have occupied seats on the Supreme Court of the United States have erred from the foundation in asserting the rights of this country to control the navigable streams and to make streams navigable that were not naturally so, to turn the courses of streams, to dig canals and pour the waters into dry and empty fields where they find it convenient and wise to make streams—unless all that body of juridical philosophy was a profound error from its inception, this proposed act is in strict line and purview of its principles. It proclaims so upon its face:

That the Secretary of Agriculture, for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams, is hereby authorized and directed, in his discretion, to acquire by purchase or gift lands more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for other purposes.

This proposed act is careful not to trench upon what are the rights of the States. It says:

SEC. 3. That no deed or other instrument of conveyance shall be accepted or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act until the legislature of the State in which the land lies shall have consented to the acquisition of such land by the United States for national forest purposes for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams.

It is true, as a matter of fact, what has been adverted to by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], that there are other things which will be affected by the very fact that these great tracts of land are bought up and cared for by the United States for the purpose of preserving the forests. They are not the prime purpose of the act; they are not the immediate effect of the act. They are simply incidental things which flow as a consequence from one main thing.

You can do no act in life, you can pass no statute that does not have collateral effects, sometimes good and sometimes evil, albeit its own purpose may be perfectly pure. This is inherent in the nature of all things mundane and of all things human. Things have a direct effect. Their collateral ones no human being can count, because they affect many other things cognate and many things even remote.

The primary object of this bill is to preserve our forests that we may preserve our water; and when gentlemen are asked how else "will you do it," they can suggest no other way, at least no other obvious way, and none that they would recommend.

For these reasons, sir, I expect to support this bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not desire to make a speech. I want to have the bill passed. I simply ask the privilege of inserting in the Record the statement of Mr. Charles C. Goodrich, an experienced navigator of the Connecticut River, made before the House Committee on Agriculture.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF CHARLES C. GOODRICH, OF HARTFORD, CONN., GENERAL MANAGER OF THE HARTFORD AND NEW YORK TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Mr. GOODRICH. Two years ago I had occasion, by appointment of the governor, to come before this committee and say a few words in regard to the whole matter of the Appalachian and White Mountain forest reserves. This season I was again asked by the governor's executive secretary if I would come here. I wish to say but very little this year, and that to apply entirely to the effect of the cutting of the forests in the White Mountains upon the navigation in the Connecticut River. I would say that for thirty years I have been manager of some thirty-five United States vessels engaged in coastwise trade between the various ports upon the Connecticut River, and in this term I have had ample opportunity to realize the effect upon our river of the denuding of the forests in the White Mountains. I would say that, especially of late years and since the cutting has extended to the minor timber, the spruce of 6 or 8 and even 5 inches, which was formerly left to grow, is now being taken by the pulp mills. I have been in that vicinity for forty years, although only thirty years in this particular capacity, and from the beginning of my experience our floods have commenced about from the 1st to the 10th of April, and they came for the next two months pretty steadily, and for two months longer there was still a steady feed from those mountains. In the last twenty years the freshet has come fully one month earlier, the snows have started to melt fully one month earlier, the continuation has been more than one month longer, and the total supply of water has been reduced at least 50 per cent, coming rapidly in the spring, when it was of no use to the mill man or the man engaged in navigation, and escaping and going by without being made valuable in any way, and has been followed, at the present time, by an almost total lack of flow, beginning with about the 10th of May and extending through until the fall rains come again, nearly to the 1st of October.

In the lower river, speaking now of Hartford, and below that to the mouth of the river, there is about 1,000,000 tons of marine commerce, and with the aid of nature, so far as Long Island Sound is concerned, 15 miles away, and the aid of the Government to the extent of $10,000 a year, devoted to the yearly removal of deposits that come from the north, the navigation has been steady and uninterrupted, and we have had that for quite a number of years. Not a trip has been lost by the daily steamers running from Hartford to New York; but, as I say, that has been made possible mainly by Government aid.

As to the effect upon the whole nation and its being more than a local question, I rather appear in the interests of navigation as a whole than as to any local matter. I would say that if at any time a cargo of lumber from Mobile or from Brunswick, Ga., or fertilizers from Georgia, or any cargo in the coastwise trade coming to that river, the very first thing you do is to call up and find out what depth of water you can actually get in the river. It will be from 3 to 5 feet, according to the varying degrees of water. We have from 15 to 30 or 40 feet in the spring, tapering off by May or June and until these alluvial deposits have been cut, it can be reduced to 9½ or 10 feet, and prices will go up correspondingly. In the last twenty years the bar at the mouth of the river, which now extends off to a distance of 3 miles offshore and into the 15-fathom line of water, and has extended to the seaward from 3 to 4 miles, to the same depth of water, has so confined the flow of the sound that the outer end of the bar has ceased to build, and it is adding constantly to the long sand shoal, now 10 miles to the west of the mouth and in mid sound.

Of course, gentlemen, I know that as long as rivers run these bars will build and they will go on building, as they will to a certain extent in the Connecticut River; with the wash of the unprotected mountains and the clearing away of these forests and the burning and denuding and washing, we are getting far more than our share of New Hampshire and Vermont and Massachusetts—more than we wish to have planted at that point, for it is certainly a source of very great danger and annoyance to us. [Applause.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I also ask permission to insert in the Record a section of the report of the committee as to the effect upon the stream flow of washing down silt from the hills and the cutting down of forests. I ask to have inserted such portions as I have marked in lead pencil.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Removal of forest has increased floods.—The balance of conditions was not seriously disturbed until within the past few decades, during which the forest has been rapidly destroyed, not only in the valleys and foothills, but on the steep slopes of the high mountains. During this time, in the streams which take their rise in the Appalachians, there has been an enormous increase in the number and duration of floods. The increases are directly proportionate to the rate at which the forest has been removed. They are greatest in such streams as the Ohio, Cumberland, Wateree, and Santee, where the most timber has been removed, and least in the streams on the watersheds of which forest conditions have been least changed. Except in the change of forest conditions there have been no factors that could have intensified flood conditions. In the Ohio River, in seventy years, the number of floods at Wheeling has increased 62 per cent, and their aggregate duration 116 per cent. In the Cumberland River, at Burnside, Ky., the number of floods increased 330 per cent in the fifteen years between 1891 and 1905, and the duration in the same proportion. During the same period, in the Wateree River, at Camden, S. C., the number of floods increased 65 per cent, and the duration 82 per cent. In the Congaree River the increase during the same time has been 94 per cent in number and 113 per cent in duration. In the Savannah River, at Augusta, Ga., between the years 1876 and 1905, the increase in the number of floods has been 94 per cent, and in duration 266 per cent. Between 1891 and 1905 the Alabama River, at Selma, Ala., had an increase in number of floods of 83 per cent, and in duration of 31 per cent.

Low-water conditions intensified.—This great increase, both in number of floods and the period during which they lasted, has been accompanied by a corresponding decrease in low-water stage, as is shown by both actual measurements and common observation. As an instance, the Tennessee River, at Chattanooga, shows a low-water period of 499 days for the decade of 1895–1904, as against 399 days for the decade of 1875–1884.

How important is the effect of forest upon the dry season flow of streams is apparent from the following table, which gives during the last eight months of the driest year the flow in gallons per square mile of streams from similar watersheds in New Jersey, some forested, others barren.

Month.	Forested watershed.	Barren watershed.
April.....	597,000	631,000
May.....	297,000	145,000
June.....	272,000	139,000
July.....	207,000	22,000
August.....	140,000	22,000
September.....	139,000	23,000
October.....	129,000	22,000
November.....	127,000	23,000

If the nine months are divided into seasons of three months each, the previous figures expressed in percentages show, approximately, the flow as given below:

	Forested watershed.	Barren watershed.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
First three months.....	58	69
Second three months.....	25	30
Third three months.....	22	11

Throughout the Appalachian region it is common observation that the streams whose watersheds have been deforested carry less water at their low stages and are low through longer aggregate periods than when their watersheds were forested.

Navigable streams filled with silt.—The floods which result from barren watersheds in the Southern Appalachians and in the White Mountains are carrying down into the streams vast quantities of sand, silt, and gravel, thereby filling the channels and interfering with navigation. Natural conditions in both regions are such as to intensify erosion. Precipitation is heavy and at times torrential. Slopes are long and very steep. The soils, especially in the South, on account of their character, erode with intense rapidity. Testimony of local engineers, Government experts, and actual users of the rivers is available from many sources, and it is unanimous that extensive and ill-advised cutting of timber from the high watersheds results in scouring the soil from the bare slopes and in removing it to the lower stretches of the streams. Since all the rivers which drain the Southern Appalachian Mountains and the White Mountains are to some extent navigable, the direct relation between forests on the mountains and navigation in the rivers which flow from them is clear.

The Government has expended on the rivers that flow from the White Mountains over $2,500,000. Over $41,000,000 have been spent upon the rivers that flow from the Southern Appalachians, and because of the continued brush of sand and silt from the denuded mountain watersheds they are less navigable now than ever before.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to section 3, which provides:

SEC. 3. That no deed or other instrument of conveyance shall be accepted or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act until the legislature of the State in which the land lies shall have consented to the acquisition of such land by the United States.

I call attention to the fact that there is no provision in that section for a cession of jurisdiction on the part of the State. Under the Constitution—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will allow me for a moment, whether the section requires it or not, the States have already ceded jurisdiction to the United States, and the Senator will find those acts of cession of jurisdiction in the hearings before the House Committee on Agriculture—every one of them. I will listen to the Senator, however, if he desires to proceed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the provision ought to go into the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to its going into the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is no reason why it should not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator offer such an amendment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will; but I want, first of all, to call attention to why I think it is necessary.

The Constitution gives Congress authority, among other things—

To exercise exclusive jurisdiction in all cases whatsoever over such district—

Describing it, and—to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State of which the same shall be—

Now, I invite the Senator's particular attention to this—for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

The property described in this bill does not come within any one of those descriptions. It is something entirely outside of that provision of the Constitution.

So my point is that this provision of the Constitution which gives Congress exclusive jurisdiction over property of that character when purchased with the consent of the State will not apply to this matter, but something more will be necessary, namely, cession of jurisdiction on the part of the State.

I think that has been held in two or three cases. It was held in effect in the Fort Leavenworth case; it was held in effect in the recent case decided by the district court in Kentucky, where property had been acquired for the purpose of making locks upon the banks of the stream.

So I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 3 the following:

And has ceded jurisdiction to the United States over offenses committed therein in violation of the laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to treat the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] fairly. He suggested to me that he would like to have the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill. I do not care to call for them. I do not want to be accused by him of taking any unfair advantage of him, but he wanted to be recorded against the bill. I will state that if the Senate would be content to let it go that way, perhaps my statement to that effect would be satisfactory to him. However, he wanted to be recorded as voting against the bill.

Mr. TELLER entered the Chamber.

Mr. CULLOM. Here is the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The bill has been passed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; if the Senator wants the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I merely wish to say that I am against this bill, and, if a roll call had been had, I should have voted "nay."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to say that I was called by some of my constituents from the Senate Chamber for the moment. Had I been here I should have felt very much inclined to demand a roll call on the bill, so that I might have recorded my vote against it. I do not do that, and I make this statement to go in the RECORD.

THE OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me for a moment just to make a statement.

Mr. CULLOM. All right; I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to make a statement in regard to House bill 21372, the omnibus claims bill. I had addressed the Chair for the purpose of moving to take up that bill.

I have no disposition to be insistent about the bill being taken up, but I am chairman of the Committee on Claims, from which the bill has come. A great many States are deeply interested in the items. I feel it my duty to make a reasonable effort to bring the bill before the Senate, but if there is no disposition to take it up, we are now late in the session, and so far as I am concerned, I will drop the matter and not annoy the Senate by a motion to take it up.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I wish to say that it is only a quarter after 3, and the omnibus claims bill is a very important measure. It contains claims of citizens of various States—North, South, East, and West. We could pass the bill in an hour. I do not think any Senator desires to offer an amendment to it. The bill has passed the House, and it is a very important bill. Many of the claims are old, and those who hold them have been waiting anxiously for some time to get their money. I would be glad if my distinguished friend from Illinois would be willing to withdraw his motion that we may take up that bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I must insist on my motion. I yield for a moment to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

REID V. THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BORAH. I present the opinion by Judge Hough, in the United States district court for the southern district of New York, in the case of Oscar W. Reid v. The United States. I move that 1,000 copies be printed as a document. It bears upon the Brownsville matter.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 18, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate, May 16, 1908.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Robert S. Burlingame, of Rhode Island, to be collector of customs for the district of Newport, in the State of Rhode Island, in place of Clarence A. Hammett, deceased.

Cornelius O'Keefe, of Arizona, to be collector of customs for the district of Arizona, in the Territory of Arizona, in place of Myron H. McCord, deceased.

SOLICITOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Fletcher Maddox, of Montana, to be solicitor of internal revenue, in place of Arthur B. Hayes, resigned.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY ARM.

Capt. Daniel B. Devore, Twenty-third Infantry, to be major from May 15, 1908, vice Travis, Eleventh Infantry, retired from active service.

CAVALRY ARM.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. Robert W. Leshner, Third Cavalry, from April 14, 1908, vice Moore, Second Cavalry, promoted.

Second Lieut. George Grunert, Eleventh Cavalry, from April 16, 1908, vice Raysor, Fifth Cavalry, promoted.

Second Lieut. William R. Pope, Second Cavalry, from April 30, 1908, vice Fonda, Tenth Cavalry, detailed in the Signal Corps.

Second Lieut. Olney Place, Sixth Cavalry, from May 6, 1908, vice Read, Sixth Cavalry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Thomas H. Cunningham, Eighth Cavalry, from May 10, 1908, vice Schultz, Fourteenth Cavalry, promoted.

Capt. Edward D. Taussig to be a rear-admiral in the Navy from the 15th day of May, 1908, vice Rear-Admiral George A. Bicknell, retired.

COMPENSATING GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES FOR INJURIES SUSTAINED IN EMPLOYMENT.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 21844) granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when, after the passage of this act, any person employed by the United States as an artisan or laborer in any of its manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy-yards, or in the construction of river and harbor work or the management and control of the same, or in hazardous employment under the Isthmian Canal Commission, is injured in the course of such employment, he shall be entitled to receive for one year thereafter, unless sooner able to resume work, the same pay as if he continued to be employed, such payment to be made under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe: Provided, That no compensation shall be paid under this act where the injury is due to the negligence or misconduct of the employee injured. All questions of negligence or misconduct shall be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

SEC. 2. That if any artisan or laborer so employed shall die during the said year by reason of such injury received in the course of such employment, leaving a widow, or a child or children under 16 years of age, or a dependent parent, such widow and child or children and dependent parent shall be entitled to receive, in equal portions, under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe, the same amount, for the remainder of the said year, that the husband, or father, or son would be entitled to receive as pay if he were alive and continued to be employed: Provided, That if the widow shall die at any time during the said year her portion of said amount shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries under the provisions of this section, if there be any; and if any child shall arrive at the age of 16 years during the said year, the portion of such child shall cease to be paid to such child from the date on which such age shall be attained, but shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries, if there be any.

SEC. 3. That whenever an accident occurs to any employee embraced within the terms of the first section of this act, and which results in death or a probable incapacity for work, it shall be the duty of the official superior of such employee to at once report such accident to the head of his bureau or independent office, and his report shall be immediately communicated through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Such report shall state, first, the origin and nature of the accident and the probable duration of the injury resulting therefrom; second, whether the accident arose out of or in the course of the injured person's employment; third, whether the accident was due to negligence or misconduct on the part of the employee injured; fourth, any other matters required by such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe. The head of each Department or independent office shall have power, however, to charge a special official with the duty of making such reports.

SEC. 4. That in the case of any accident which shall result in death, the persons entitled to compensation under this act or their legal representatives shall, within ninety days after such death, file with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor an affidavit setting forth their relationship to the deceased and the ground of their claim for compensation under the provisions of this act. This shall be accompanied by the certificate of the attending physician setting forth the fact and cause of death, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for. In the case of incapacity for work lasting more than thirty days, the injured party or his legal representatives desiring to take the benefit of this act shall, within a reasonable period after the expiration of such time, file with his official superior, to be forwarded through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, an affidavit setting forth the grounds of his claim for compensation, to be accompanied by a certificate of his attending physician as to the cause and nature of the injury and probable duration of the incapacity, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for. If the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall find from the report and affidavit or other evidence produced by the claimant or his legal representatives, or from such additional investigation as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may direct, that a claim for compensation is established under this act, the compensation to be paid shall be determined as provided under this act and approved for payment by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

SEC. 5. That the employee shall, whenever and as often as required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submit himself to medical examination, to be provided and paid for under the direction of the Secretary, and if he refuses to submit to or obstructs such examination his right to compensation shall be lost for the period covered by the continuance of such refusal or obstruction.

SEC. 6. That to seek to obtain by fraudulent means or to accept benefits under this act to which the person is not entitled shall be deemed a misdemeanor on his part and punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

SEC. 7. That payments under this act are only to be made to the beneficiaries or their legal representatives other than assignees, and shall not be subject to the claims of creditors.

SEC. 8. That the United States shall not exempt itself from liability under this act by any contract, agreement, rule, or regulation, and any such contract, agreement, rule, or regulation shall be pro tanto void.

SEC. 9. That this act shall only take effect as to the right to receive compensation for any damages from accidents as to those occurring on and after July 1, 1908.

SEC. 10. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith or providing a different scale of compensation or otherwise regulating its payment are hereby repealed.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from New York is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Alabama to twenty minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Alabama how much time he wants.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have been asked by several gentlemen on this side of the House for time. I suppose I shall want all of the twenty minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, this bill practically covers all Government employees engaged in hazardous occupations.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to state that this is an important bill, and I would ask unanimous consent that there be forty minutes' debate on a side.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I can yield him some time, if he can not get it from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no desire to ask time for myself, but I assume that the House would want more time in which to debate the matter.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I shall ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and then parcel out the balance of the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To that I shall object.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that all Members be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, to that request I make objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to the extension of debate on the floor, but I shall object to printing and extending in the RECORD. There has been too much abuse of that.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to compensate Government employees engaged in hazardous occupations. Such employment is practically confined to arsenals, navy-yards, manufacturing establishments (such as armories, clothing depots, shipyards, proving grounds, powder factories, and so forth), to construction of river and harbor work, and to work upon the Isthmian Canal. The bill provides that the wages of such an employee who is injured in the course of such employment, without contributory negligence or misconduct, shall be continued for one year unless he is sooner able to resume work. If such an one is killed, or subsequently dies during the year, an amount equal to a year's wages or the remainder thereof is paid in equal portions to his widow, children under 16 years of age, and dependent parent, or to the survivor or survivors.

All payments are made under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who is authorized to pass upon questions of negligence and misconduct and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to safeguard the interests of the Government and of the beneficiaries. From his decision no appeal is allowed. Sections 3 to 9, inclusive, make ample provision for the protection of the Government, requiring notice of accident, investigations, medical examinations from time to time, and so forth. Section 10 repeals all acts in conflict.

The principle of this measure is not new to our Government. For five years railway postal clerks have been thus compensated, and since May 4, 1882, members of the Life-Saving Service have enjoyed similar benefits. In case of injury a postal clerk is paid his wages for one year, unless sooner able to resume work, ranging from $800 to $1,600. If he is killed or dies within one year, his family receives a lump sum of $1,000. A surfman in the Life-Saving Service, if injured, may receive his wages for two years, unless sooner able to resume work, ranging from $650 to $1,560 for the two years. If killed, his family receives a like amount. Under the provisions of this bill a Government artisan or laborer, if injured, receives one year's wages, unless sooner able to resume work, ranging from $300 (boys) to $1,600 (foremen and experts), being an average of about $800. If killed, his family receives a like amount.

There is insufficient data as to the number and character of accidents occurring to Government employees upon which to base an accurate estimate of the cost under this bill. In the railway mail service there are 14,347 postal clerks, and last year it cost the Government $98,143.95 because of accidents. The Life-Saving Service employs 1,898 surfmen, and the Government during the last year paid for accidents and deaths $41,270.51. This amount also includes sums paid for sickness contracted in the service.

There are approximately 6,600 artisans and laborers employed in arsenals, armories, and other manufacturing establishments of the War Department, and during the past ten years 8 were killed and 41 more or less seriously injured. The average absence from work because of these injuries was about two and one-half months. Under this bill the Government would have paid during the ten years a total of about $20,000, or an average of $2,000 a year. It ought to be added that the fewness of the accidents arising in the workshops of the War Department is largely due to the excellent condition of the machinery and the discipline exercised by the officers in charge.

The thirty-one navy-yards, naval stations, training stations, and naval magazines under the Navy Department employ approximately 25,000 men, but no statistics are available showing the number of accidents. Under the Isthmian Canal Commission approximately 11,000 men are engaged in hazardous occupations, their wages ranging from $500 (unskilled laborers) to $2,200 (locomotive engineers). During the calendar year 1907 there were 142 accidents resulting in death and approximately 1,300 treated in the hospitals. As no statistics are available showing the wages received by those killed or injured, no estimate can be made of the probable cost of compensation under this bill. The number of injured in proportion to those employed is very large, although it is likely that many accidents were slight and many due to the contributory negligence of the employees.

The Government in its river and harbor work employs approximately 12,800 artisans and laborers, their wages ranging from $400 to $3,600, with an approximate average of $1,200. The perfect machinery and the discipline exercised over the employees have resulted in a very few accidents, 75 approximately having occurred since and including the year 1894. Of those injured only 2 were killed and 1 died.

The bill covers approximately 55,400 employees out of a total of 337,751 connected with the classified and unclassified civil service of the United States. If to this amount be added the postal clerks and members of the Life-Saving Service, the aggregate who may be cared for, if injured, will be increased to 71,000.

This measure is not as comprehensive or as liberal as many desire. Bills have been introduced extending relief to all employees of the Government. Some of these bills exclude negligence; others allow actions to be brought in Federal courts, with and without limitation as to the amount recoverable; others, following the rule of compensation adopted in this measure, double and treble the amount to be paid in case of injury or death. Nevertheless, it has seemed wise to the committee to confine compensation so far as possible to hazardous occupations, and to adhere not only to the system already adopted by the Treasury and Post-Office Departments, but to dispense relatively about the same amount of relief.

This plan, uniformly advocated by such employees of the Government as appeared before the committee, seems to be much more satisfactory because it gives food to the family at a time when the employee can not earn wages. Indeed, a strong feeling was evidenced at the hearings that some less expensive system of compensating accidents should be adopted than the lawsuit, which involves delay, produces uncertainty, withholds money when most needed, and works other hardships. What the injured employee seems to desire is to have his family supported while he is unable to earn wages, and he seems to prefer to take a less amount, to be used at such a time, than to wait the result of a slow lawsuit, even though it may, if he succeeds, bring him two or three times as much.

Several of the governments of Europe have adopted this system of compensation. Under the provisions of the English workmen's compensation act of 1897, an employee of the Government, if injured, receives for a period not exceeding six months one-half his average weekly earnings during the previous twelve months; if killed, his family receives an amount ranging from $730 to $1,460.

In France certain Government employees in state, departmental, and communal establishments are paid two-thirds of their annual wages for permanent total disablement and one-half for temporary disability, besides medical and surgical benefits. When death occurs, those dependent upon him receive 60 per cent of his annual wages until the widow remarries and until the children reach the age of 16.

In Germany employees of the Government in the industrial establishments of the army and navy, and in the postal, telegraph, and railway service, receive for total disability from one-half to two-thirds of their daily wages and a less amount for partial disability. In case of death dependents receive 60 per cent of their wages until widow remarries, etc.

Similar compensation is provided in Austria and other European countries. The money so paid seems to be derived for the most part from accident insurance for which the governments pay in whole or in part. In Austria, for illustration, an employee receives 60 per cent of his wages for the first four weeks from the required sick benefit insurance, for which the employee pays two-thirds and the Government one-third; thereafter during disability he receives the same amount from the required accident insurance fund, of which the employee pays 10 per cent and the Government 90 per cent. In Belgium employees of the Government are compensated under the compulsory accident insurance law, the Government paying the whole premium. The entire cost under the workmen's compensation act of France is borne by the Government. In Germany sickness and accident insurance is compulsory except in the case of soldiers and other excepted classes, which are otherwise provided for.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I notice here that the employees in the Reclamation Service are not covered by this bill. A great many of these employees are engaged in very hazardous work, where there is blasting going on, and they are liable to injury. Will the gentleman state why they are not included in this bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Because, I may say to the gentleman from Washington, that although it may be hazardous employment, it is usually done under contract and not directly by the Government. This was my information after the gentleman spoke to me of the matter during the preparation of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I came with reference to the matter as soon as I learned of the preparation of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the gentleman from Washington if nearly all of that work is not done under contract, and are not those men employed by contract?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, not entirely. Some of it the Government does.

Mr. STERLING. Does the gentleman have any idea how much of it is done by the Government?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not say; but I know there is a great deal of it. For instance, in my own county the work is being done by the Government now and not by contract.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I am in sympathy with this matter. I do not see any reason why the word "hazardous" should be used in line 7, page 1. Suppose one of the employees of the Isthmian Canal was engaged in work that could not be classed as hazardous and yet through the blasting and other hazardous operations that were going on along the line of the Panama Canal he was injured; he could not recover anything, could he, under this bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I will say to the gentleman that this covers, or is supposed to cover, all employees under the Isthmian Canal Commission who work in dangerous places or are likely to be hurt by blasting.

Mr. KEIFER. But if the gentleman will pardon me, I am speaking now of the bill and not what somebody said. This is the language:

Any person employed by the United States as an artisan or laborer in any of its manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy-yards, or in the construction of river and harbor work, or the management and control of the same, or in hazardous employment under the Isthmian Canal Commission—

Now, the employees must be actually employed in hazardous employment to be entitled to any relief under the bill should it become a law, and if they are not so employed and yet get injured through hazardous work of others, they could not recover under this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I will say to the gentleman that the bill covers all persons who could by any possibility be injured through hazardous work.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not know. You use the word "hazardous" relating to employees of the Isthmian Canal Commission and do not use it as to artisans and laborers in manufacturing establishments or arsenals or navy-yards or in the construction of river and harbor work. Why this discrimination?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Because men so employed are engaged in hazardous occupations, while not all on the Isthmus are engaged in hazardous occupations.

Mr. KEIFER. I think they are not all engaged in actual hazardous occupations, but they are all in hazardous relation to hazardous work, and that is my observation, having been there twice and somewhat carefully examined or observed the work in progress all the way across the Isthmus.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The bill was worded advisedly so as to exclude those not engaged in hazardous employment. All those engaged in navy-yards, arsenals, proving grounds, and other establishments indicated are likely to be hurt.

Mr. SULZER. Will my colleague permit an inquiry?

Mr. KEIFER. Let me make this inquiry, and then I have finished. Suppose one of these men not engaged in hazardous employment at all is traveling upon the Isthmian railroad that is engaged in carrying back and forth material in making the cut at Culebra and other places and he is injured through some means or other through no fault of his. He could not recover under this, while the man engaged in the hazardous work on the train could had he been injured.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I think the Secretary of Commerce and Labor would find that when an employee is traveling on the railroad he is engaged in hazardous employment.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. In my opinion this is a most meritorious bill, and I am very much in favor of it as a step in the right direction, but what I wish to know is this: Why does not this bill cover all the employees of the Government, such as the letter carriers, the railway mail clerks, the elevator men in the public buildings of the Government, and so forth. These men are all engaged in hazardous employment and just as likely to be hurt as anybody else, and they should have this protection as well as those now provided for in the bill. I would like to amend the bill to include all the toilers and workers.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I will say to my colleague from New York postal clerks are already provided for. They get their year's wages if injured, and if killed, their families receive a thousand dollars in a lump sum. The Life-Saving Service men are likewise protected. The purpose of the bill is to protect those who are engaged in hazardous employment.

Mr. SULZER. That is exactly what I am in favor of doing. But I want the bill to go further and include all the employees of the Government. The bill is good so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough to suit me.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield further. I reserve the balance of my time. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not yield. Mr. Speaker, this legislation illustrates to my mind the harmful effect of the Democratic attempt to usurp the functions of the majority and force upon it its programme of legislation by filibuster. Of course I do not suppose they expect to accomplish their object, perhaps they do not want to do so, but whether they accomplish that or not, there is one thing they do accomplish and inevitably accomplish. They force the majority to bring its legislation under stress with a limit of time like this under suspension of the rules, so that we have no opportunity to amend or debate it as we should, and, consequently, the Democratic filibuster and consumption of time is directly responsible for limiting this House in expressing its opinions upon legislation.

This bill is an illustration. Ordinarily, as it is on the Union Calendar, it would have to go to the Committee of the Whole and be subject to amendment, and I believe would be infinitely improved by the votes of the majority of the House. I think that a great majority of this House believe that the employees of the Government throughout the country should at least have the same rights that every employee of any private individual or corporation has; that he should at least have the right, when injured in employment, to sue the person or the corporation by whose negligence the injury occurs. That is a privilege that every other individual in the United States has. That is the least which I think every Government employee should have, and if this bill was subject to amendment I have no doubt that this House would at least go as far as that. But I recognize that under the conditions forced upon us we can not have that right. Therefore, although I think this bill does not go nearly far enough, yet it does accomplish a little something; it does give to the Government employees, who have absolutely no remedy, some slight remedy, and therefore I hope that this bill, as a mere stop-gap, a gift of a small part of what the employees ought to receive, will become a law. My attention was drawn to this subject many years ago, and although I know it is unpopular and tactless to say "I told you so," I can not refrain from saying that before this subject was generally agitated, nearly ten years ago, I introduced a bill, it being called to my attention by employees in my district, allowing a Government employee to sue the Government the same as he could any other person. Since then the subject has been discussed, the President of the United States has taken up the subject, labor itself has gone further and public opinion has gone further, and bills have been introduced which practically amount to an insurance of the Government employees against any accident. Whether the House would adopt that principle if it had the opportunity, I do not know. It seems to me the least that the House would give would be that when they are injured without negligence of their own, and by the negligence of their employer, they should have the same right as all of the rest of us have—to resort to the courts for their legal remedy. But inasmuch as there is no opportunity for amendment, I hope that this bill in its present form will be adopted.

Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman this question: It speaks of the employees having the right to sue the Government for injuries the same as suing a private corporation, for instance. Under the terms of this bill would they have any right, if the bill became a law, to sue the Government?

Mr. GILLETT. I am afraid I must have been very obscure in what I said. That was the very criticism I was applying to this bill, because it does not give any right to sue the Government. All this bill does is to give the right to a person who is injured to go to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and get, at the most, one year's wages. Now, what I think he ought to have is a right, at least, to go and sue for a fair compensation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman entirely, but under this bill they would have no such right, and the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor would be a final decision on all these propositions?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. That was the very criticism I was bringing against the bill. I hope I make myself clear now.

Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa. Then, does the gentleman think that the bill ought to be voted down?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not. I think it is better to have this bill than nothing.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to renew my request that twenty minutes of additional time be given for debate on this bill. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the refusal of consent to extend remarks upon the bill by the leader of the minority, I shall object.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I reserve the balance of my time until the gentleman from Alabama consumes some of his.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how much more time the gentleman from New York has?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary with a unanimous report. It is not perfect in all particulars, but it was the best that could be done to harmonize the divergent views of the members of the committee. The bill does not present an entirely new legislative question. An examination of the report will show that laws similar to this obtain in respect to railway mail clerks and some other employees of the Government engaged in some other hazardous work.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] goes out of his way to indulge a very boyish complaint against the minority Members of this House. He undertakes to tell to the country that this bill is not perfect and will not be perfect as it passes this House, because, he says, the minority will not allow you of the majority to amend this bill as it ought to be amended. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to make this proposition, this request, right now: I ask unanimous consent that five hours be given to the consideration of this bill and that amendments be allowed during that five hours. I ask unanimous consent that this may be done. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STERLING. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who objected, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman from Illinois objects. So, then, we find that objection to amendment of this measure comes from the Republican side, by a gentleman from the State of Illinois. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, it has not been the purpose of the minority members of the Committee on the Judiciary to bring partisan politics into such a matter as this, and I deplore the fact that the gentleman from Massachusetts saw fit to inject into this great question a lot of puny, peanut politics. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the gentleman from Massachusetts saw fit to endeavor to obtain some partisan advantage out of the consideration of this measure. He called the attention of the House to the fact that time is flying and that little or none is left to consider measures of this kind. I call his attention, and that of the country, to the fact that there is nothing which compels this House to adjourn on the 23d day of May, or any other day prior to next December. If the majority on this floor is in the mood, if the majority in this House is sincere in its oft-repeated declarations in favor of labor, this House need not adjourn on the 23d of May, but can go on any length of time it desires in order to pass legislation that the people want. I am voting for this measure now because I can get nothing better.

But we can, if the majority chooses, stay here and pass an anti-injunction bill, a bill which you can put up to us under a rule, name it by number and by title, introduced by a gentleman on your side of the House, and we will stay here with you after the 23d day of May and vote upon that anti-injunction proposition. We will stay here until the Commission that was appointed to inquire into the constitutionality of the eight-hour act has reported. That law has been in effect, so far as legislative enactment is concerned, since 1868 in this country, but the heads of the Departments have consistently and constantly ignored it, and are now ignoring it, and it has been the subject of legislation in each of the Congresses in which I have served. Yet we are in precisely the same position now in regard to it as we were when I first came into this House. Bills are introduced here, hearings are had, and some subterfuge is adopted in the closing days of the session that carries them over the Presidential election. There is no reason why this character of legislation should not be disposed of.

Can you go to the country and say that you can not pass these bills because you had to go to Chicago, perhaps, to prevent the nomination of some man who will act in the interests of the people? This bill is not much. There is nobody who desires it greatly except for this fact: That it recognizes the principle. It means that this great Government is not lagging too far behind the other great nations of the earth, practically every one of which has adopted the principle in its entirety. We do not give a man a right of action; we do not give him the right against the Government which he has against any other employer. We simply say to him that if he is injured and can satisfy the head of some Department that he has not violated the rules and regulations by him prescribed, and that he is without fault, then after filing affidavits to show that he has done everything proper for him to do under the circumstances, perhaps he will get his wages for a year, if his injuries are sufficiently severe.

It is impossible, of course, for the Members of this House to understand the bill in the limited time that it will be before them for discussion, but this much can be said of it, that it is a step in the right direction. I sincerely hope that it will pass. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman from New York if he desires to consume his five minutes now.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I prefer that the gentleman consume the remainder of his time.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is one of the bills upon the Democratic minority programme, and it is a bill upon which I am not going to demand the yeas and nays, in accordance with the Democratic programme first asserted by me.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] has said that "the minority was trying to usurp the rights of the majority." You Republicans have gotten so arrogant and dogmatic that you think when a man elected by the people to serve a constituency on this floor happens to be a Democrat, he has no right to express opinions about what the legislative programme of the Congress of the United States ought to be, nor any number of them to combine to express that opinion. We are simply asserting the right to awaken the public conscience, and it is better to pass good legislation such as this is, and into which you have been whipped under a twenty-minute debate on each side, than not to pass any good legislation at all. That is as far as that goes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to prove your bad faith in connection with this matter, the gentleman from Massachusetts has said that I have forced you to act under this special rule. Why, I have not. You adopted the special rule. We on this side voted against the special rule, and you are not even by that rule compelled to operate in every case under that rule. You could have made an exception in this particular case. You could have given the right of amendment by simply resorting to the ordinary procedure, and you need not have shackled your men on that side to vote "up or down" without any power of amendment. However, you of your own will, possessing power to grant right to amend, or yourselves to amend, in the very motion to suspend, have purposely denied it. Now, as I am not going to call the roll, and as that takes thirty-five minutes, I ask, in order to demonstrate the hypocrisy of the pretense that the right to amend is cut off by me, unanimous consent that thirty-five minutes may be given to Members to offer amendments to this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, I knew the objection would come, and I hoped, so that it might be a Republican party move, it would come from the floor leader of the Republican party. It has come. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET], so fair, so honest, will go back to the people of Massachusetts and say:

The speech that I made, though I thought at the time I was doing sincere work for the public, turned out afterwards to be pure, unadulterated buncombe, as far as the Republican party was concerned, and the objection that the bill could not be amended by me must lie upon my own side, the Republican side of the House.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to amend this bill in at least two respects. I have read it very carefully; I agree to it very much indeed. I heartily indorse it as an improvement on present wrongs. I think, however, that the ninety days' time given in section 4 for a claim for compensation to be made is too short. I should like to see it extended. I think the provision in section 6 that anybody who undertakes to "accept benefits under this act to which he is not entitled shall be guilty of a misdemeanor" ought to be stricken out, because under a possible construction of the act, if a man made a claim for damages and that claim was overruled by the Department, the sole judge and final arbiter under the act, it might possibly subject him to punishment for a misdemeanor for having attempted to get compensation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield one minute more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, Mr. Speaker, this bill will go to another branch of the National Legislature, and I have a hope that these two defects and other defects will be cured there, and I hope there will not be a vote cast, upon this side of the Chamber at any rate, against this bill, and I hope that that side of the Chamber will also be unanimous, either from conviction or because of fear in supporting it and in giving to the laboring men in the employ of the Government their just rights. If the bill be not perfect, it can be perfected on the other side of the Capitol. If the bill be not perfect now, it might have been perfected by the majority here during this long session or by unanimous consent now granted to consider amendments; but this majority is so anxious to show that it is helpless in the face of a minority which itself is vaunted to be really helpless and so anxious to indulge in demagogic nonsense about being "forced to do what it does not want to do by a minority" that is powerless to force anything, that you will not perfect it here, though I hope the Senate, composed of a majority of Republicans and some White House Democrats, will. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill goes a short way in the right direction. It should go much further. The Democrats are ready to go further, but the Republican party in this House, under their tyrannical rules, will not permit it. You think that you will throw this little "sop" to the laboring people of the country and thereby accomplish your purpose of hoodwinking them. Gentlemen, if I had my way, instead of saying to the laboring man, the artisan, the mechanic, "You may have compensation for the time you lose from your work on account of injury, or your family may have one year's pay on account of your death," I would throw open wide the doors of the courts of the country to them, and say, "Come into the temples of justice and stand upon the same footing as any other citizen in this broad Republic, and contend for every right and every dollar to which your cases entitle you." Ah, it accords but little justice to the laboring man. Why are you not willing to go further? Why are you not willing to take up the anti-injunction measure and the other meritorious legislation demanded by those engaged in laborious pursuits? If you are willing to do it, the Democratic party will remain here with you all the summer to consummate their just demands. We challenge you to that field of legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman from Texas will permit an interruption, I would say that there is nothing in the Constitution or the rules forcing this House to adjourn until next December, and they can stay here and perfect legislation if they will.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Concurring with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I will go further, and say if you will accord this justice, the Democrats will remain in session until the 1st day of December in order to secure the legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a good step in the right direction, and I shall vote for it. I listened with some surprise to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETTE] who complained about the majority being controlled by the minority of the House. Does the gentleman mean to say that the minority, the Democrats, of the Judiciary Committee, control the majority, the Republicans, of that committee?

Mr. GILLETTE. The gentleman does not quote me correctly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman stated that the minority of the House was controlling the majority of the House.

Mr. GILLETTE. I said that you took up so much time in roll calls that we were obliged to adopt rules which necessarily cut off debate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But the rules did not apply to the work of the committee which framed this bill, and the gentleman knows that since the leader of the minority has been whipping the majority into action and compelling a quorum to come here every day, that the majority has been working every day, and has done more of the ordinary routine and legislation since he begun his so-called "filibustering" than in any day previous thereto in this Congress or in the memory of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

I ask the gentleman, and I ask the majority, why can you not have night sessions, as in previous Congresses? Why can you not labor here at night, if you want to help along the laboring people of this country? Why can you not remain in session until December and perfect legislation which you say is impaired by the action of the minority? You have the majority, the majority makes the rules, and you make the laws, and the minority has served as a cat-o'-nine tails on your legislative backs to put you to work and keep you at it. If we had not whipped you into action, this Congress would have gone down into history as a "do-nothing Congress," and you know it. Mr. Speaker, the majority did nothing in December, and practically nothing in January, and you know the people of this country know that fact; and now Members of the majority are whining here because the minority, the Democrats, are making the majority do a little something for the relief of the people of this country, which could have been and should have been done long since. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from New York will yield me two minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SHERLEY. So that I have four minutes. Mr. Speaker, in that four minutes it is impossible to make a full statement as to what this bill does and does not contain, and before attempting to make even a limited statement as to some of its provisions I wish to state that there have always been two theories as to the position the Government should take in regard to compensation for employees. One view partially embodied in this bill is that there should be fixed rates of compensation. The other view is to give to the citizen the same right against the Government that he would have against an ordinary employer, to give him access to the courts that he may there establish his rights. In my judgment there is a middle ground which could be successfully invoked. That would be to make provision that certain compensation should be given in case of injury, but it should be optional with the employee to accept that or to assert his right in a court, his election to assert his right in court depriving him of any right under the compensation provisions of the bill.

Coming to the provisions of this bill, and as an evidence of its crudity, I desire to call attention to one fact. There is certain compensation fixed in the case of death, and that compensation provides that the widow or minor children shall receive the same sum for the remainder of the year that the employee would have received if alive and he had continued to be employed. In other words, if he dies two days prior to the expiration of his year his widow would be entitled, under the ordinary construction of this bill, to compensation for two days, whereas if he died at the beginning of the fiscal year the compensation would extend over the remainder of the year—a proposition that surely was not intended by the authors of the bill. Doubtless what was intended was that in case of death resulting from injuries received in the Government's employ the beneficiaries of the deceased employee should receive a sum equal to the yearly compensation that would have been paid such employee had he lived and continued in the Government employ less such amount as shall equal the sum, if any, that might have been paid him during his illness after his injury. But this is not what is provided, by any means.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SHERLEY. Just a suggestion.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If a laboring man in my State was killed by a railroad accident, his family would get $5,000, while under this bill his family would simply get the balance of his salary for the year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; the amount the family would receive would depend upon the time in the year's employment he was killed. Now, if the House was permitted to amend the bill that could be remedied by putting in a few words and striking out seven. On page 2, if you struck out in lines 14 and 15 the words "for the remainder of the said year," and in line 16, after the word "pay," insert "for the year," the law would read that these beneficiaries shall receive the same amount that the husband, or father, or son, would be entitled to receive as pay for a year if he were alive and continued in that employment that long, and then add just prior to the word "provided," in line 17, the words "less such amount as equals the sum, if any, paid such employee, in accordance with the provisions of section 1 herein."

Now, this would make the bill accord with what, as I have said, was the evident intention of the bill.

If I had the time, I might urge other objections to the bill, but realizing the legislative situation I shall not urge the nonpassage of the act. I realize that it is this or nothing, and I realize that this bill will probably be perfected before it becomes a law, and that in any event the moment it goes on the statute books and real judicial attention is directed to it there will then be enacted a real law that will do substantial justice to the employees of the Government. What I hope to see is a bill providing for certain definite compensation if the employee chooses to accept it, with the option of refusing to accept such compensation and then have the right to seek his remedy in court as he would seek it against any other employer. The effect of that will be twofold. It will not only be to give to the employees just compensation, but it will be to make the Government conduct its business properly. The greatest restraint that has been upon the railroads, and the greatest help in the protection of life, has been the right of the individual citizen to go into court and recover damages for negligence. Way beyond your safety-appliance laws in effectiveness is that right of the citizen to make the railroad pay for its negligence. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill. Its purpose is to compensate Government employees engaged in hazardous occupations in case they are injured. It is a step in the right direction, and I hope the bill will pass unanimously. It has been adopted in European countries, and it should be the law in this country. In many things along these lines we are behind the age. The only criticism that I can make in regard to the provisions of the bill is that it does not go far enough to suit me. If I had my way, I would provide that every employee of the Government engaged in hazardous pursuits should have the benefits of the terms of this bill. Why only include those engaged in certain departments of the Government? Why not include those engaged in hazardous employment in every department of the Government? They should all be included. It is only fair and just and proper. I will go as far as any man in Congress in enacting legislation to protect Government employees. The honest, the industrious, and the faithful employees of the Government are entitled to this consideration. The bill should be amended to include all the employees of Uncle Sam engaged in dangerous occupations. If the House had the opportunity to consider this bill as it ought to be considered, on its merits, I know there are enough Members in the House to vote to amend the bill so that it will provide some protection for all the employees of the Government. However, that can not be done under the rule. This is the best we can get now, and I shall vote for the bill, and hope it will pass and become a law before we adjourn. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NICHOLLS].

Mr. NICHOLLS. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be a Member of the House of Representatives at a time when a bill of this character is about to be passed. I shall vote for it heartily. I want to say that we are extending a principle which is in effect and has worked admirably in Great Britain. They also have in Great Britain a liability bill, which allows them to sue for damages in case the damage is greater than the compensation provided for by the compensation act. I believe that this principle ought to become an established fact in the various States of the Union, in order that the people who are engaged in mines and factories who are unable to employ lawyers and sue for damages and whose children suffer for want while such lawsuits are going on may be at once compensated and properly taken care of. In the anthracite region, a part of which I represent, there are approximately 600 people killed every year. If a tax of 2 cents per ton were placed upon the coal mined, it would provide $900,000 for the 600 men, or $1,500 each, and leave a half million dollars to relieve those who are injured.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. One minute.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, for about six months I have worked to prepare a similar bill to the bill that is under discussion now. I introduced my bill February 10, which not only provides for compensation—

Mr. CLAYTON. What is the number?

Mr. SABATH. The number is H. R. 16739. It not only provides for compensation for Government employees, but it provides for compensation for injuries to employees engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, which would include thousands and thousands of laboring men who are employed in hazardous and dangerous occupations. I notice that that bill has not received any consideration. If the gentlemen who reported this bill that is before us now would have been sincere, fair, and honest with the laboring men, they would have reported my bill in place of this one. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Two sessions ago a bill similar to the one now under consideration was introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD], and—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, how much more time have I?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKINNEY].

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am strongly in favor of the Government being made liable for compensation on account of injuries received by its employees in the course of their employment. I can see no good reason why such liability should not be established by law. I shall vote for this bill, not because I consider it the best measure that was before the Judiciary Committee, but because it is a step in the right direction, and for that reason only. And I shall trust that in future sessions Congress will provide more adequate and more just compensation.

The Government is a competitor in the field of labor with private employers. As yet there has been no satisfactory reason advanced as to why the same liability attached to private employment of labor should not extend to the Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to my colleague from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL].

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps as good a bill as could get the unanimous support of the Judiciary Committee. However, I am disappointed in it. It is not, in my judgment, as fair or as equitable a bill as should come before us. Every employment, every relation in life is somewhat hazardous and dangerous, and I know of no reason why every employee who is injured through no fault or negligence on his own part should not have the right to full compensation, as he would have against a corporation or against a private individual on the same facts. He can not recover at all under this bill unless he proves he is entirely free from negligence or carelessness which caused or contributed to the accident. Therefore there is no reason why he should not recover all the damages to which he is entitled and all the damages which he or his family has suffered by reason of his injury or by reason of his death. I will support this bill, and I hope that in the next Congress we will have the opportunity of voting for a more comprehensive, fair, and equitable measure.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to my colleague from New York [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, after the objections made by the minority that no opportunity was given to amend, I listened with interest to the speech made by the leader of the minority, for in that speech he mentioned the amendments that he would like to offer. They were to the ninety-day provision and to section 6, but those are not the sections which I think most would like to have amended. I suspected if they were given a chance for amendment they might vote "present," as they did the other day.

Mr. COCKRAN. Try us.

Mr. PARSONS. The section which really ought to be amended here and which I would like to see amended, is the first section of the bill, which describes the classes of employees who are to be benefited by the legislation. I wish I could offer an amendment, and if I could it would be to strike out all the language from line 4, after the word "States," down to the word "is," in line 9.

Mr. SULZER. We will give you unanimous consent to do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendment.

The question was taken, and a majority having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20345) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21260) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5989. An act authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Maj. C. De W. Wilcox decoration and diploma presented by Government of France; and

S. 3940. An act for the proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and move to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 20345) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20345) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, and 12, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment and strike out the amended paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Secretary of legation to Salvador and consul-general to San Salvador, two thousand dollars; and the provision in the act of May eleventh, nineteen hundred and eight, for a consul-general at San Salvador is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For salaries of consuls-general and consuls, as provided in the act approved May eleventh, nineteen hundred and eight, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States," approved April fifth, nineteen hundred and six,' as follows: Consuls-general, three hundred and three thousand dollars; consuls, seven hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars; in all, one million and thirty-six thousand dollars.

"For salaries of five consular inspectors, at five thousand dollars each, twenty-five thousand dollars."

And the Senate agree to the same.

C. B. LANDIS,
J. R. PERKINS,
WM. M. HOWARD,

Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
S. M. CULLOM,
A. S. CLAY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, a second is ordered.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this report needs any discussion. I would, however, be glad to answer any questions anyone would like to ask.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can not get hold of any printed copy of what the Senate amendments are, and I would like to see them from the Clerk's desk, if possible, and know what we are acting upon. The gentleman gives no explanation, and everybody knows that with the disorder that is kept in the House we can not hear what is read from the desk.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state very briefly what the Senate amendments are.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I have asked.

Mr. PERKINS. Two amendments were made by the Senate, one authorizing the Secretary of State to expend $10,000 in connection with the proceedings in reference to the boundary treaty between this country and Canada; one authorizing the Secretary of State to expend, if required, $15,000 in protecting the rights of American citizens who are using lumber and floating lumber on the St. John River, the boundary between Maine and Canada. Both of these questions present international questions, in which it is proper, as we thought, that the Government should protect the rights of our own citizens. In these two amendments, recommended by the Secretary of State, adopted by the Senate, the House committee concur. The Senate had also added an item of $15,000 for three additional inspectors of consuls. There are now five inspectors of consuls, who receive a salary of $5,000 each per annum. The Senate increased them by making it eight, increasing the appropriation for their allowance from $25,000 to $40,000. In the opinion of the House conferees that increase was not at present required; in that the Senate concurred and receded from their amendment. These are the only amendments, except amendments that are purely verbal in reference to the phraseology of the bill.

There are two other small amendments that for the moment I overlooked. The Senate added in reference to San Salvador an increase of salary of the secretary and consul-general from $2,000 to $3,500. To that we objected, and the Senate receded. The Senate added an appropriation of $3,300 for the expense of a building erected on land owned by the Government in Tokyo, Japan. Some years ago the interpreter, a very valuable man, I am glad to say, in the employ of the Government, erected upon land owned by the Government a building which he has since used. That cost about $3,300 or $3,400. He now asks to have allowed the expense of that building which he erected and which stands upon Government ground. That was allowed by the Senate, but the House conferees thought that that would be a dangerous precedent, for anyone under those circumstances who could find ground in any of those oriental countries owned by the Government might erect a building on Government land that he required to use, and, having used during service, would then ask the Government to pay for it. In view of that fact, the House conferees declined to agree, and the Senate receded.

I will say to the House that the only amendments allowed increasing the appropriations in the bill as it passed this House were the two items amounting to in all $25,000, not necessarily to be used, but to protect the rights of our own Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment. Is it true, as I have seen it stated in the papers, that the Senate has placed in this bill an item for an appropriation of $500,000 for the purchase of ambassadorial homes in Berlin and Paris?

Mr. PERKINS. That did not come on the bill. That was an amendment offered in the Senate, but ruled out in the Senate on a point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They did not come in on the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. They are not on the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, the gentleman moves that we accept the conference report?

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the conference report be accepted by the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the gentleman has made a very clear and lucid explanation of the matter, and has not wasted the time of the House or the country in an endeavor to explain what he is doing. His explanation has been so well made that it has removed certain objections which I had to the acceptance of the conference report, and I suggest that his example be imitated upon that side of the Chamber in the interest of the intelligent transaction of business.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. The gentleman will admit, will he not, that praise from Sir Hubert is praise indeed!

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, certainly; I admit that. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question in regard to the item of $15,000 which the Secretary of State is authorized to expend in the settlement of some questions in reference to citizens of the United States in the State of Maine using the St. John River in the transportation of their logs. How does that question arise? I will say that my understanding is that under the existing law citizens of the State of Maine floating logs down the St. John River float them into Canada, and then back into the United States, and under the Dingley tariff law there is a special provision that admits these logs free of duty. Now, has the Canadian Government interfered with the rights of the citizens of the United States in the use of the river for that purpose?

Mr. PERKINS. The statement is made to the committee that the Canadian Government threatens to interfere in this way: There are American citizens who own timber along the St. John River, who have constructed booms to be used in the floating of their logs, and the Canadian Government alleges that certain acts of our citizens are contrary to treaty rights. The government of the province of New Brunswick has authorized the bringing of litigation to restrain these American citizens from the use of these booms, and has even threatened to interfere by force, to destroy certain booms on the river. Now, it is hoped—

Mr. TAWNEY. Are these booms located in Canadian water; that is, on the Canadian side, or in that part of the river that flows through Canadian territory?

Mr. PERKINS. They are located in the river, and are claimed by our Government, as well as by the lumbermen, to be within the rights which were guaranteed to American citizens by the Webster-Ashburton treaty. Negotiations are now pending between the Secretary of State and the representative of the British Government to have these questions adjusted. It is thought that probably those negotiations will be brought to a termination satisfactory alike to Canada and to our citizens; but it is possible that litigation may arise, and that the provincial government of New Brunswick may take steps which will make it necessary that our citizens be protected, and the Secretary of State thought, and our committee thought, that the facts were such that it was proper that our Government should protect our own citizens in the enforcement or protection of these rights if litigation arises. It is hoped that this expenditure will never be required.

Mr. TAWNEY. The explanation of the gentleman is satisfactory. I wanted to know what the provision was for.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, upon that proposition I will ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 214, nays 7, answered "present" 7, not voting 159, as follows:

INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 21899 as amended, providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to continue until the 1st day of July, 1909, the members of the Inland Waterways Commission designated by the President by letter of March 14, 1907, as set forth in Senate Document No. 325, Sixtieth Congress, first session, with the authority, powers, and duties prescribed in this act. In case any vacancy shall occur in the membership thereof the President is authorized to make appointments to fill such vacancies.

SEC. 2. That such Commission shall make to the Congress reports and recommendations in the month of December of the year 1908 and a final report, and shall make reports to the President or to the Congress at such other dates as may be directed, either by order of the President or of Congress. Such reports shall contain a full and complete account of all the acts, recommendations, and transactions of the Commission and of all moneys received and expended.

SEC. 3. That said Commission shall continue the investigation of all questions relating to the development, improvement, and utilization of the waterways of the country, and the conservation of its natural resources with a view to navigation and the promotion of commerce among the States; and shall further investigate the relations between waterways and railways as connected with the effective promotion of commerce, including the facilities and sites for the transfer of traffic; and shall make examination of the work of the respective bureaus and agencies of the Federal Government which now make reports upon inland waters and water supply, or upon the uses and effects of water courses, and shall prepare recommendations with a view to avoiding duplication of duties, authority, or work, and to the organization of an efficient and economical system for the making of such investigation and reports.

SEC. 4. That such Commission may occupy such quarters belonging to the Government as may be available and as may be conveniently utilized for the purposes of the Commission, whether in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, and on failure to obtain such quarters, it may rent other quarters; and it may provide such equipment and facilities as may be necessary for the proper discharge of its duties, and the expenses thereof shall be a proper charge against the fund hereinafter provided.

SEC. 5. That said Commission may expend money for necessary stenographers and clerical assistance and for the traveling expenses of the members and necessary employees while engaged in the performance of their duties, and also for the traveling expenses of such experts as may be requested by a vote of the Commission to appear before them.

SEC. 6. That to carry out the purposes of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of the funds of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed the sum of $20,000, to be expended by said Commission.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZIEL). Under the rules, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Georgia to twenty minutes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this is the bill known as the "Inland Waterways Commission bill," which establishes a temporary Commission, to expire on the 1st day of July, 1909. It continues the personnel of the present Commission for the reason that the committee thought it better that the former Commission should carry on its work, which, as shown by its reports, has been well under way for a year and has been satisfactory in its results. The powers, duties, and authority of the Commission are defined by this bill.

In section 3 it is shown that four different subjects are defined to the Commission for investigation. First, matters relating to the development and improvement and utilization of the waterways of the country relating to navigation and the promotion of commerce among the States; second, the conservation of the natural resources, with a view to navigation and the promotion of commerce among the States; third, to investigate the relations between waterways and railways as connected with the effective promotion of commerce, including the facilities and sites for the transfer of traffic; fourth, the examination of the work of the respective bureaus and agencies of the Federal Government which now make reports upon inland waters and water supply or upon the uses and effects of water courses, with a view to avoiding duplication of duties, authority, or work, and to the organization of an efficient and economical system of the making of such investigations and reports.

These are the four different classes of investigations that are authorized by the act.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAWSON. Under the provisions of this bill does the Commission have any jurisdiction or cognizance of the question of waterways and navigable streams?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; it has, in connection with the development, improvement, and utilization of the waterways of the country so far as they relate to the navigation and commerce among the States. That matter can be thoroughly investigated and the facts brought to the attention of Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. Without the passage of this bill, would the President of the United States have any power to perpetuate the Waterways Commission?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. He would only have this authority which he exercised before. He could designate certain officers of the Government to do certain work somewhat outside of their present scope of authority.

Mr. FINLEY. I believe it is a fact that the President has promised that if Congress does not perpetuate the Commission that he will perpetuate it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. That has not reached us in any official way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the President also appointed on this Commission civilians, persons not connected in any way with the Government service, did he not?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. They may have been originally, but as I understand now, all of the nine members to be continued are in the Government service somewhere, so that no salaries will be paid to members of the Commission, and the law strictly complied with.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The point I had in mind was this: That in the appointment or designation of persons not connected with the Government to-day in the service, unless the President was specifically authorized by law to do it, he has violated the law which prohibits acceptance of voluntary service for any purpose.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce examined the law in the preparation of this bill and report, and we could find no violation of law on the part of the President.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did the gentleman from Minnesota ever read that act?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. We have. I think the committee examined the act. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that I think the House should know that the criticism which has been visited upon this House, upon Congress, and upon the committee for not preparing the bill speedily is not justified by the facts, and I think it is best that the facts appear of record as to what has been done with the Inland Waterways Commission bill. It was introduced first into this House by the chairman of that Commission, Mr. BURTON of Ohio, on the 20th of April last. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Nothing was brought to the attention of any member of that committee for several days, when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] asked that this bill be referred to the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which had charge of dams and waterways. A few days later than that the Secretary of the Interior visited the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in connection with another matter and also asked for that reference.

At the very next meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I think it was a week ago, that bill was referred to a subcommittee. That subcommittee had hearings on the very day that the governors met at the White House. The very first time that any application was made for a hearing, within an hour that hearing was granted. The whole Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce never delayed this measure for one single moment. The first hearing was asked for and the first hearing was given on last Wednesday afternoon. A new bill was prepared and substituted, which is now laid before the House, and that substitute was adopted by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on yesterday at its first meeting after the report of the subcommittee, so that the House can see that there never has been a delay of one single minute in the investigation and examination and report on this measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I notice that this bill provides an appropriation of $20,000 to pay the expenses of the Commission. Is not that unnecessary, in view of the fact that the sundry civil appropriation bill carries an appropriation for the Inland Waterways Commission of $20,000?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is mistaken. There is nothing in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the Inland Waterways Commission. There is an appropriation for the International Waterways Commission, which is an entirely different proposition. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] is eminently correct in his statement as to the history and treatment of this subject by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I am aware of the fact that several times humorous gentlemen have attempted to make that committee the butt of their jokes, by alluding to it as various forms of graveyards and sepulchers; but it was entirely unjustified. That committee works all of the time, and when its attention is called to matters of importance it gives to them immediate consideration. This subject, it seems to me, is important. I do not expect to resist the bill. I am heartily in favor of it. I expect to yield my time to gentlemen who do wish to resist its passage. I say it ought to pass for a great many reasons. First, the inherent and prospective benefits to the country; second, we have been informed that the Commission is going to be perpetuated anyway. That being true, we should provide that it be done by operation of law and not by operation of the Executive.

I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] five minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not support this bill, and that is the reason why I shall indulge in a few observations at this time. One of the reasons that I shall not support it is because it would be yielding to the swish of the "big stick" in the White House. During the meeting of the conference or

Congress of governors now being held in this city, the President made a certain remark, and I desire to read an account of it taken from the New York Sun, dated May 14, 1908. Referring to this conference, it says:

About the most striking thing that happened during the opening session this morning was the applause which greeted a characteristic dig which the President made at the Congress of the United States. He had reached that point in his formal address to the governors where he spoke of the work of the Inland Waterways Commission, created by him last year and still existing without any direct authority of law. Here the President departed from the text of his speech, saying with much distinctness:

"And if Congress fails to perpetuate this Commission as a permanent body, I will do it myself anyhow. I will see that it is continued."

I want to call the attention of this House and the attention of this country to the fact that here the President of the United States has forced some Member on that side to introduce this bill, the purposes of which he says he would carry out without regard to the bill or any law authorizing the same.

Now, what Member of Congress, what Senator and what Representative in the whole Republic charged with lawmaking, with legislating, ever conceived the idea of such a Commission? It was purely an invention on the part of the President.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CLAYTON. I surely will.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that on the last night of the session, in the closing hours of the last Congress, unanimous consent was asked for the passage of the resolution authorizing the creation of this Commission, and it was denied.

Mr. CLAYTON. But that came after the President had first suggested the idea.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it was denied.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was denied.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the President created this Commission without authority of law—

Mr. TAWNEY. I simply wanted to call attention to that fact.

Mr. CLAYTON. After this House had expressly refused to pass the law, which was originally the idea of the President, even that proposition, as the gentleman from Minnesota must admit, came originally from the President. The idea that I was trying to impress was this, that the idea originated with the President, it is now pursued by him, and he says he will keep it in operation with or without the sanction of the law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it not true very much good legislation has been enacted by this Congress at the suggestion of the President of the United States?

Mr. CLAYTON. Some has; perhaps other very good legislation would have been enacted at his suggestion if the majority had cooperated with the minority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is not this good legislation?

Mr. CLAYTON. I doubt whether it is or not, and if the gentleman will possess his soul in peace I will give him some reasons why I do not think it is good legislation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will listen.

Mr. CLAYTON. This body and the other body at the other end of the Capitol are charged with the legislation of the country. This idea was expressly repudiated by this House, and after the express repudiation on the part of the House the President takes it up again, without authority of law, and carries his idea of an Inland Waterways Commission into effect by the appointing of one without the authority of law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, before yielding to the next gentleman I want to say one thing which I omitted—

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman give me one minute more?

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I was interrupted in the course of my remarks and I did not have time to complete what I wanted to say. I would ask for the time now to complete my remarks, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record for the purpose of completing my criticism on this bill. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from South Carolina yields me his two minutes. Mr. Speaker, this bill creates an unnecessary Commission. It is not necessary. We have the Rivers and Harbors Committee here that are as well informed on these questions and can inform themselves just as well as this Inland Waterways Commission. It is an unnecessary burden and expense. Here authority is given to expend money and increase expenses, and if I had the time I would like to read the provisions of the bill, and it will entail a whole lot of useless expense upon the Government. It is unnecessary to pass it. We have a committee now just for this business, and I assume the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] knows just as much about this matter as chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors as he will know as a member of this Inland Waterways Commission, and he has been a member of both. It is an unnecessary burden; it is a useless thing; it is nothing in the world but a knuckling to the man in the White House. You have repudiated this proposition once; you have turned down his recommendation, but now you dare not stand up and vote like you did about twelve months ago. Stand up again and vote as you did before. The recommendation ought not to have any more force of reason behind it now than it had then. You have yielded to the threat that he made the other day at the White House conference—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand, Mr. Speaker, it is true, as stated by the gentleman from Minnesota, that the members of this commission are all officials and therefore will not entail any expense by their salaries. I also understand that was true before, with the single exception of Senator BANKHEAD, who was at that time a private citizen and has never been paid. I hope that this Government will vindicate its supposed character as an honest and upright business institution by providing, at some time, in some way, for the payment of Senator BANKHEAD for his work done at that time.

Mr. CLAYTON. Look in section 2 and in section 3, and you will see that this bill provides for expenses other than salaries. What those expenses are we do not know.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I yielded to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] more time than I could spare him with due regard to my promises to other Members, and I can not take time myself to look at the sections indicated nor to answer his question. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, about two weeks ago, pending the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, I submitted some observations on a sale of articles of virtue, I believe they call it, that had been sold or were being sold at auction in New York. The advertisements described it as loot, and the history of the articles on sale indicated it was loot. I published as a part of my remarks an editorial from a New York paper reflecting somewhat upon the character of the people who had been in the diplomatic service of the Government and who were the owners of those objects of art and who were selling them at auction. Incidentally there was mentioned in the editorial Lieut. Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, of the United States Marine Corps. He was not the game I was after and I failed totally to observe the mention of his name. I have received a letter from Colonel Waller saying that the article did him injustice and asking me to correct it as to him so far as I could. I therefore ask the permission of the House to have this letter read by the Clerk, so that it may be inserted in the Record, unless Members are willing to have it inserted without being read, which is just as agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARINE BARRACKS, NAVY-YARD,
Norfolk, Va., April 27, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. SLAYDEN: The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 18th instant contains an extract from the Evening Post, New York, introduced by you. This article seriously reflects upon my conduct, both in China, 1900, and Samar, 1902-3.

As to the latter accusation, the record of the court-martial before which I was tried contains the facts, and it does not in any way support the allegations. As to the insinuations or allegations in relation to my conduct in China, I can say that they are entirely false, and this will be verified by the officers serving with me, some of whom have written expressing a desire to answer the article.

I was provost-marshal of the Tartar city of Peking all during my stay and provost-marshal of the Forbidden or Imperial City part of the time. I performed all duties connected with my office to the expressed satisfaction of the commanding general. One, and perhaps the most arduous, duty was to suppress and prevent looting. So well was this duty performed that the Chinese residents came to my quarters the night before I marched from Peking and in speeches thanked me for the great services I had done for them. At this time they presented me with an enormous white silk umbrella inscribed with the services rendered, expressing their thanks and appreciation. Two years later the Chinese Government asked for the names of the officers who had so faithfully guarded the Imperial City, in order that they might be thanked for their services. The paper was sent to me for the names of the officers, as my battalion was the first to guard the sacred doors and I was the provost-marshal.

After six months of heavy work in China, the first month of which we were fighting for existence almost every hour in the day, for my part in the campaign I was brevetted and promoted numbers by our own Government, receiving letters of thanks and commendation from the representatives of England and Japan. I returned to the Philippines and remained there two years longer in active service.

All the officers with me and all the persons knowing me will assert that the charges made are absolutely false. Thinking that you might have, perhaps, failed to notice my name in the article referred to, I write to ask that you will do what you can to remedy the injury.

Very respectfully,

LITTLETON W. T. WALLER,
Colonel, United States Marine Corps.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I favor this bill. It is not a party matter, and for my part I do not care where it comes from. It deals with a subject second to none in importance before the American people and its legislative bodies. All of us who are here, and who are seeking to do so, are every day learning many things with reference to the great question of water transportation, and everything that can tend to systematize and forward the matter of water transportation ought to be encouraged. I believe that no money was ever expended for public improvements, if expended within the purview of the Constitution and judiciously expended, but that was a wise expenditure by the Government. The small amount that will be added by this Commission will be one of the wisest expenditures that this Government incurs. Every session of Congress is teaching us that the important issue before the people is the regulation of freight transportation, and the greatest means for regulation of railway freight will be the establishment of canal and water transportation. [Applause.] And if we can but supplement those transportation facilities with proper regulation of the coordinate system of railway transportation, this country will soon find no more need of discussing the question of discriminations between place and place. The water transportation of this country will destroy the capacity or the opportunity for discrimination if it becomes an established fact in this country, as it has in the great countries of Europe. [Applause.] I take it that this Commission will go far toward throwing light upon the means and method of establishing actual water transportation in this country. All over this land the crying want now is that our rivers, our waterways, our inland water transportation, be not a thing of memory or of romance or of fancy or of paper and pretense, but that it become a reality, and this bill will help to accomplish that purpose. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield them to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor, if things were in such an attitude that I could consider the subject-matter upon its own merits, of the purposes of this bill. Some time ago I said upon the floor of the House that I was in favor of a board of public works and of Congress making a certain appropriation each year—an absolutely nonpartisan board of public works, actuated by no sectional or district interests, able to act without logrolling, and expending that money for the best interests of interstate commerce, navigability, public buildings, national parks, and other Federal purposes. But it is not possible this morning to consider this matter upon its own merits. A breach of the privileges of the House of Representatives has been committed. If an utterance such as that which fell from the President of the United States the other day had fallen from the lips of King Edward VII, or from the lips of Kaiser Wilhelm, there would have been a revolution almost in England or in Germany.

A long, long time ago, after Julius Caesar had crossed the Rubicon, after he had brought the Gallic legions with him and had made senators of some of the Gauls; after he had come from another pursuit of Pompey and Pompey's legions, and had finally had the head of Pompey presented to him in Egypt; after he had given himself up to the soft inducements of the Queen of Egypt for a while, and, satiated, had returned to Rome, he finally said, in substance, to the tribune of the people upon an important occasion, "Oh, it is unnecessary for you to act or to appear unless you feel like it;" and he also said, in substance, to the senate of Rome, "Meet and deliberate if you choose; but if you do not choose to meet and deliberate it is all right; I can accomplish my purpose without you;" and he proceeded to found, if not in name still in fact, the Roman Empire.

Do not understand me as indulging in melodramatics. The President of the United States is not Julius Caesar, because Julius Caesar was one of the greatest men and one of the greatest constructive geniuses that the world ever knew, and the President of the United States is neither. I do not, therefore, mean to say that the President of the United States can revolutionize American institutions. He can not. One reason why Senators and Representatives and public opinion of the country permit him such latitude of wild and lawless utterance is because Senators and Representatives and the public have measured him up about properly and have concluded that he has no power much except the power of verbal exercise. That power has been illustrated in this House lately—lamely, impotently, and inconclusively, as all of us know.

In a bushel of message chaff he presented five grains of wheat. The minority Members of this House took up those five grains of wheat, after much sifting, and said, "Let us utilize these five grains."

This great power that the President has asserted—to set aside the Congress itself by ukase, or Cæsarean decree, by the formation of commissions without express authority, and to continue them without appropriation—will alarm none, as he has illustrated his inability by being unable to make thirty Republican Members of this House sign an agreement to support him in planting, with the hope of germination, the five grains of wheat that are found in all the immeasurable bushels of chaff that he has presented by message to the American people. With thirty from him, the Democracy had and has yet the balance needful.

Mr. Speaker, I am perhaps excused from voting for the bill upon the ground that it is most meritorious in itself as legislation and ought to be passed, and upon the further ground that the President's ukase or attempted ukase is not really a ukase at all, but is mere verbal exercise. But, upon the other hand, it seems to me that Congress ought to assert itself somehow.

The legislative body ought to make it known to the American people that it has existence and that it has certain duties, and that it does not recognize the right of the President of the United States to legislate. However much the Federal majority may indulge in Federal usurpation, when the Federal usurpation is agreed to by both branches of the political Republican party—executive and legislative—the hope might perhaps be indulged in that the legislative part of the Republican party is not willing to recognize executive usurpation without at least legislative support upon the part of the Republican party.

Mr. Speaker, the President has in several of his great addresses in reference to the military and naval power of the United States said that nothing was more foolish than to make a "bluff" unless "you had a hand behind your bluff." Now, I am a little bit disposed—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am a little bit inclined to "call his bluff" and vote "no," and see if he dares to continue this Commission in power and appropriate for it regardless of legislative authority. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I agreed to yield all the rest of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], chairman of the Commission; but I would say to my colleague from Georgia I would like to yield a minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], with the permission of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] also would like to have a minute.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will yield the gentleman my time.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I would like to give it, but I can only yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one minute.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily the appointment of commissions is not a good thing; but in this instance, having examined the proposition and believing in the merits of it, I desire to record myself in favor of extending the Waterways Commission. It comes with a unanimous report of the committee. I can not see any possible objection to it. The distinguished chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee [Mr. BURTON] of Ohio, who always does his work well on that or any other committee, who is patriotic, looking to the interests of the whole country, believes the Commission is necessary and entirely proper; therefore, no matter from what source it comes, believing it meritorious, I shall cast my vote in favor of this legislation, meaning so much to the people of the whole country. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eleven minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is with some hesitancy that I speak in favor of this measure, because I am a member of the Commission to which it relates. If the passage of this bill depended upon my vote alone, I should probably decline to vote. But I regard it as most salutary in its intent. President Roosevelt's conception in forming this Commission was a splendid one. He saw the necessity for coordination in the different uses of water. He recognized that the great water courses and the water supply of the country are not only useful for navigation, but for power and for irrigation, and that forest preservation is necessary to maintain the water supply. He thought it desirable that the question be treated as an entirety and that the clarification and quality of water should also be considered. Another object which should as well be attained is the prevention of erosion of soils and the great accumulation of silt in navigable and nonnavigable streams.

I want to correct one slight error in a statement which has been made. At the very close of the last Congress a bill was introduced for a commission, but that bill was not so comprehensive as this. After the expiration of the Fifty-ninth Congress the President chose this Commission of nine members, including four who were regarded as having given special attention to the subject of navigation, and with them the Chief of Engineers, a member of the Bureau of Soils, the head of the Irrigation Service, the head of the Forest Service, and the head of the Bureau of Corporations. It will readily be seen that a commission of this kind could do far more effective work than any single committee of the House. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is very much limited, limited in fact to the mere subject of the improvement of rivers and harbors. So I think there is reason for the existence of this Commission.

But it is said that President Roosevelt has said something in regard to his continuing this Commission, and it is maintained that we must oppose a salutary measure because of some remarks of his. Now, I want to say for Theodore Roosevelt—

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question before he leaves the subject that he was on. He talks about the limited jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Has not your committee full power to have hearings covering every phase of the question of the improvement or the navigability of our rivers and the improvement of our harbors, and do you not have elaborate hearings, and do you not take testimony, and do you not publish great volumes?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I must decline to yield further. I desire to say something more in my brief time. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has ample authority to grant hearings relating to the navigability of streams; but if the gentleman had listened to what I have said, he would have realized that its work has to do with only a fraction of the subjects contemplated in the work of this Commission.

Now, as regards what the President said, the witty and profligate Buckingham once wrote a mock epitaph upon King Charles II in these words:

Here lies our mutton-eating king,
Who never said a foolish thing,
And never did a wise one.

Theodore Roosevelt has not lain awake nights or suffered anxiety in order that the last two lines of this epitaph might be appropriate to him. He has relied upon action rather than upon speech. He has, in fact, said some things impulsively, but he stands by the record of what he has done. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am perfectly willing to have the gentleman from Mississippi compare him with Julius Caesar as regards constructive ability. He found a country in which, along with a whirling era of industry and great growth of wealth, there had developed unfortunate beginnings of dishonesty and fraud, and he set out—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. He set out to bring back the old days of honesty in which the proud and strong, as well as the weak, shall be punished for wrongdoing. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The people love him because he does express himself sometimes impulsively. They trust him for his honesty; and when you come to analyze—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How much more time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has four minutes and a half.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, well, that is time enough.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Without any reference to the President's utterances at all and referring now to his deeds, the gentleman, a Representative of a district in the State of Ohio and the American people, gives his approval—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi for a speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not making a speech; I am asking a question—whether the act of the Executive establishing a commission without the authority of Congress—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi is out of order. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Ohio had yielded.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I yielded for a question, but not for a four minutes' speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked a question—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I ask that the Speaker enforce the rules.

The gentleman from Mississippi says that the President has only the power of verbal expression. It would appear that the gentleman from Mississippi has only the power of verbal expression, and you are welcome to compare the two in their achievements. [Applause on the Republican side.] And yet, what was there in the President's remark after all? This Commission had been appointed. The members had been performing their work without pay, meeting their own expenses, and it was perfectly proper for the President of the United States to say that if the Congress omitted to make an appropriation, to give a legislative status to this body, then and in that case he would continue their work as it had been carried on before. [Applause on the Republican side.] He had a right to ask information or advice for his own assistance. There is no occasion for any sensitiveness about it.

I should not favor an Executive usurpation; but the President believed that this Commission had work as yet unfinished, believed that this work might properly be finished with benefit to the country through the information that would be obtained, and that its continuance would promote the general welfare. And, as one member of the Commission, I want to say that as we have volunteered our services in the past, we are willing to volunteer those services in the future if the Congress does not see fit to make appropriation for us.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Very briefly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. We of the Mississippi Valley were largely comforted by the act of the President in appointing that Commission, believing, as we did, that it was due to our work in the last session, and we approve heartily of the President's act because we believe it has led to the action of Congress in the matter.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not want the gentleman from Missouri to claim all the credit for the creation of this Commission, for there are several other localities which desire some credit, and which deserve it. But there is credit enough for you all. It is evident you are all for it and that you all want it. While we may disappoint the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Missouri; while we may disappoint the Mississippi Valley and other localities, we hope to accomplish a work which shall be of value to the nation and shall bring more of order where now a degree of chaos exists. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has one minute.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this bill was carefully re-formed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to bring it within the constitutional power of Congress, because we realized that there are some limits upon our authority. This bill carefully regards these limitations, gives this Commission all the work that is possible within these limits, requires a report to Congress, and then it will be our duty to pass upon that work. This is a Congressional commission as well as an Executive commission. It can give us most valuable information; it can make most valuable suggestions; its work does not go to one committee alone, but to half a dozen or more committees of this House, whenever that report shall come in next December, as we hope it may.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

Mr. ADAMSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 226, nays 2, answered "present" 9, not voting 150, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 20120) to authorize the construction of a railroad siding to the United States navy-yard, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CARTER, Mr. BURKETT, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 17506) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890, as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. DANIEL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CREATING IN MINNESOTA A NATIONAL FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4186) with House amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to suspend the rules and pass the following Senate bill with House amendment. The Clerk will report the bill as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4186) creating in the State of Minnesota a national forest reserve consisting of certain described lands, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created in the State of Minnesota a national forest reserve, consisting of lands and territory described as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a point where the north line of section 31 in township 148 north, range 28 west, fifth principal meridian, intersects the low-water mark of the lake formed by the waters of Third River; thence easterly along the north line of sections 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36 in township 148 north, ranges 28 and 27 west, continuing easterly along the north line of section 31 in township 148 north, range 26 west, to a point where said line intersects the low-water mark of Bow String Lake on the west shore; thence southerly along the west side of said lake at low-water mark to a point where it crosses the section line between sections 16 and 17 in township 147 north, range 26 west; thence southerly along the section line on the east side of sections 17, 20, 29, and 32 in township 147 north, range 26 west, and continuing southerly along the east side of sections 5, 8, 17, 20, 29, and 32, township 146 north, range 26 west, continuing southerly along the east line of sections 5, 8, 17, 20, and 29, township 145 north, range 26 west, to a point at the low-water mark on the right bank of the Mississippi River on the section line between sections 28 to 29 in said township; thence southeasterly along the right bank of the Mississippi River at low-water mark to its confluence with Leech Lake River in section 12 in township 144 north, range 26 west; thence southwesterly along the right bank of Leech Lake River along the low-water mark to Mud Lake; thence along the line of low-water mark of Mud Lake on its northern and western shores to the point where Leech Lake River empties into the same on fractional section 32, township 144 north, range 26 west; thence up said river along the low-water mark on the right bank thereof to a point in fractional section 29 where the line intersects the low-water mark of Leech Lake; thence in a northwesterly and southwesterly direction following the contours of said lake at low-water mark to the point at low-water mark on the shore of said lake on the northeast boundary of the ceded Leech Lake Indian Reservation on section line between sections 5 and 8, township 143 north, range 29 west; thence in a southwesterly direction following the contours of said lake at low-water mark to the point on said lake at the southwestern extremity of Ottertail Point; thence southwesterly in a direct line to the southern extremity of section 25 in township 143 north, range 31 west; thence in a westerly direction along the contour of said lake to the southwestern extremity of section 26 in said township; thence in a northerly and westerly direction along the contour of said lake at low-water mark to a point where the center line through section 2, running in a north and south direction in township 143 north, range 31 west, intersects the low-water mark of Leech Lake; thence northerly through the middle of said section 2 to the shore of a small lake at low-water mark; thence along the east shore of said lake at low-water line to a point where the section line between sections 35 and 36, township 144 north, range 31 west, intersects low-water mark of said lake on north shore; thence northerly on section line between sections 35, 36, 25, and 26 to the low-water mark at the shore of a small lake; thence northerly along the east side of said lake to a point where the section line between sections 25 and 26 intersects the low-water mark of said lake in said township; thence northerly along the east line of sections 26, 23, and 14 to a point on the east line of section 14, 20 chains north of the southeast corner of section 14; thence west 20 chains; thence north 20 chains; thence west 20 chains; thence northerly along the east side of a small lake to a point where the center line running in a north and south direction through section 14 intersects the north side of said lake at low-water mark; thence northerly along the center line of said section through section 11 to the quarter corner between sections 2 and 11 of said township; thence westerly to a point 20 chains west of the northwest corner of section 11; thence north 40 chains; thence west 20 chains; thence north to a point where the center line running in a north and south direction in section 3 intersects the township line between townships 144 and 145 north, range 31 west; thence westerly to the quarter corner on the township line in the southeast quarter of section 34 in township 145 north, range 31 west; thence north 20 chains; thence west 40 chains; thence north 20 chains; thence west 20 chains to the quarter corner between sections 33 and 34 in said township and range; thence northerly along the east line of sections 33, 28, 21, and 16 in said township to a point where it intersects the right of way of the Great Northern Railway as at present located; thence easterly along said right of way to a point where it intersects the shore of Cass Lake at low-water mark in section 15, township 145 north, range 31 west; thence northerly along the west shore of Cass Lake and the south, west, and north shore of Allens Bay and the northwest shore of Cass Lake to a point along the contour of said lake at low-water mark at the head of the Mississippi River, approximately in section 21, township 146 north, range 30 west; thence easterly along the right bank of said river to a point where the range line between ranges 29 and 30 west intersects said river; thence northerly along the range line to the northwest corner of section 19 in township 147 north, range 29 west; thence easterly along the north line of sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 in said township and along the north side of sections 19 and 20 in township 147 north, range 28 west, to a point where said line intersects the left bank of Third River at low-water mark; thence northerly along the right bank of Third River to the center line at low-water mark of the lake formed by the waters of Third River; thence southeasterly and northerly along the contour line of said lake to the point of beginning; and it is the intent of this act to include in said national forest and make a part thereof all that certain territory and land which has heretofore been selected by the Forester of the Department of Agriculture as the ten sections situated in townships 144, 145, and 146 north, ranges 30 and 31 west of the fifth meridian in Minnesota, and designated as being the ten sections referred to and authorized to be selected by section 2 of the act approved June 27, 1902, being chapter 1157, United States Statutes at Large, volume 32, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,'" approved January 14, 1889; and also the islands in Cass Lake in the State of Minnesota.

And in addition to the lands and territory above described, the lands described by section 2 of said act of June 27, 1902, as follows: "One hundred and sixty acres at the extremity of Sugar Point, on Leech Lake, and the peninsula known as 'Pine Point,' on which the new Leech Lake Agency is now located," shall be included in and are hereby made a part of said national forest: Provided, That this act shall not in any manner abridge the right of citizens to the use of the west and northwestern shores of Cass Lake.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to proceed with the sale of the merchantable pine timber upon the above-described land outside of said ten sections and said islands and points, in conformity with the provisions of said act above entitled, and reserving 10 per cent of such timber from sale, said 10 per cent to be designated by the Forester of the United States Department of Agriculture; and as to the timber upon said ten sections and said islands and points, the said Forester is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe from time to time to sell and dispose of so much of the standing timber thereon as he may deem wise and advisable in the conduct of a national forest: Provided, That a commission of three persons shall at once be appointed, consisting of one person to be designated by the President, one by the Secretary of the Interior, and one by a general council of the Indians of the Winibigoshish, Cass Lake, Chippewas of the Mississippi Reservation, and Leech Lake Reservation, to be held under the direction of the agent at Leech Lake Indian Agency; and said commissioners shall proceed forthwith to appraise the value of the 5 per cent of timber heretofore reserved from sale by the provisions of said act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,'" approved January 14, 1889, and the 10 per cent hereafter reserved under the provisions of this act, and the timber upon said ten sections and upon the unappropriated lands on said islands and points, and shall ascertain the acreage of actual land included under the provisions of this act and to the estimated value of said 5 per cent of timber reserved under the said act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,'" approved January 14, 1889, and the 10 per cent reserved under this act and the estimated value of timber upon said ten sections and upon the unappropriated lands on said islands and points, to the sum of the values of the timber so estimated shall add an amount equal to $1.25 for each and every acre of land not otherwise appropriated which they find covered by the provisions of this act, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior. The Indians designated in this section, acting through a representative who shall serve without compensation, to be named by them at the time of their appointment of the commissioner herein, shall have sixty days in which to appeal to the President of the United States from the findings of said commissioners, as certified to the Secretary of the Interior. At the end of said sixty days, if no appeal has been taken or if an appeal has been taken then, upon the determination thereof by the President, the Secretary of the Interior shall certify the amount found by said commissioners, or if modified by the President the amount determined by him, to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon place such amount to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota as a part of the permanent fund of said "All of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota" provided for in an act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, and the acts supplementary thereto, and the amounts so certified to the Secretary of the Treasury shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, pursuant to the terms of said acts.

SEC. 3. That any Indian having an allotment within the limits of the national forest created by this act is hereby authorized to relinquish such allotment and permitted to take another allotment in lieu thereof outside such national forest, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior; and the allotments of any deceased Indians located within the boundaries of said national forest shall not hereafter be disposed of under section 7 of the act of June 27, 1902 (vol. 32, Stat. L., p. 245); but the heirs of said deceased Indians shall have the right, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior and under such rules as he may prescribe, to relinquish to the United States the lands covered by such allotments and to select surveyed, unappropriated, unreserved land within the limits of any of the ceded Indian lands in the State of Minnesota and outside of the national forest hereby created in lieu of the land covered by such allotments; and the lands so relinquished by the Indians or their heirs shall thereupon become part of the said national forest. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized on request of the Forester of the Department of Agriculture to purchase such relinquishments from said Indians or their heirs and to pay for the same from any moneys received, after the appraisal of timber herein provided for, on account of the sale of timber from the national forest hereby created, or from the sale of any other products or the use of any lands or resources thereof.

SEC. 4. That all land in any of said reservations, the Winibigoshish Indian Reservation, Cass Lake Indian Reservation, Chippewas of the Mississippi Reservation, or Leech Lake Indian Reservation, not included in the national forest hereby created as above described, heretofore classified or designated as agricultural lands, is hereby declared to be open to homestead settlement; and any of said land which has been classified as timber land shall be open to homestead settlement as soon and as fast as the timber is removed therefrom, in conformity with the homestead law, except that none of said lands shall be disposed of except on payment of $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 5. That all moneys received from the sale of timber from any of the lands set aside by this act for a national forest, prior to the appraisal herein provided for, including all moneys received for timber under sales made by the Secretary of the Interior as authorized by existing laws and section 2 of this act, shall be placed to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, as provided for in an act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, and the acts supplementary thereto, and shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, pursuant to the terms of said acts; and after said appraisal the national forest hereby created, as above described, shall be subject to all general laws and regulations from time to time governing national forests, so far as said laws and regulations may be applicable thereto.

SEC. 6. That the commissioners provided for herein shall receive a compensation of $10 per day each for each and every day actually spent upon the work herein provided for, which shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, and no commissioner shall be paid for more than ten days' service.

SEC. 7. None of the Indian graves now upon any of the islands or points referred to in this act shall be disturbed and the Indians shall continue to have the right to bury their dead at such places as they have heretofore used for that purpose, under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Forest Service.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any of the land in said reservations excluded from the reserve created by this act, or to dispose of said land, except as provided by the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and an act of June 27, 1902, entitled "An act to amend an act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," or the provisions of this act; or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of the said lands and the timber thereon, and to dispose of the proceeds thereof, as provided in said acts, only when received from the sale of the timber and the lands, as therein provided.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act amending the act of January 14, 1889, and acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. A second is demanded, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules a second is ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, in 1889 Congress passed what was known as the "Nelson Act," which authorized the appointment of a commission of three by the President of the United States to confer with the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota for the relinquishment of all their reservations except certain parts of White Earth and Red Lake reservations. The Commission was appointed under that act by the President, and in 1890, after many conferences with the Indians, they ceded all of the lands to the United States, and those lands were thrown open to settlement where they were agricultural lands, and timber lands were subject to the sale of the timber on the land and after the timber should be removed the land should be open to settlement, to be paid for by the homesteaders at the rate of $1.25 an acre. A part of this land was disposed of under the Nelson Act. In 1902 there was passed by Congress what is known as the "Morris Act." That act provides that there should be a forest reserve amounting to approximately 235,000 acres carved out of the lands remaining at that time.

Under the Nelson Act the village of Cass Lake was established on the shores of Cass Lake. A land office was there established and the village grew to have about 1,500 people. When this Morris Act was passed the Forestry Commission selected the 235,000 acres immediately adjoining the village, so as to cut out the residents of that village from the advantages of the settlement of the country adjacent. There was no provision made in the Morris Act for a settlement with the Indians for the lands which were taken for this forest reserve. The object of the present bill is to reduce that forest reserve by something like 70,000 acres and open those 70,000 acres for settlement—that is, the agricultural lands therein. Whatever timber lands there may be that have pine on them the timber is to be sold off the land at public auction, after it is appraised, at not less than $5 a thousand. As a matter of fact the timber on other parts of the reservation under the auction sales, I think, have sold as high as $11 a thousand.

There is to be retained in this reservation 10 per cent of the timber, which, I think, are known as "mother" trees, for re-seeding the ground, and that will conserve the forest. These lands are at the head of the Mississippi River and are suited for that purpose. There are many lakes there that the forest will conserve the waters in. This act of 1902 stopped all progress of the settlement of that country and appropriated this land without making any provision for settlement with the Indians. If this act passes it authorizes a credit to the Indians for these lands at the rate which was established to be paid by the settlers, $1.25, after they have lived upon the land and proved up under the homestead laws. The Indians have been dissatisfied all the time since the Morris Act was passed on account of the holding up of this land without any provision whatever being made for them. The Government will have to pay for the 10 per cent reserve of timber at the appraised value, and after that, of course, what remains will be a part of the reserve, and as the timber may be disposed of on that, under the Forestry Commission, whatever that brings will be credited to the Forestry Department. This is a plain statement of the facts that are covered in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, in a general way I doubt the early effectiveness of acquiring forest reserves and placing them under the absolute exclusive supervision of the Government to the exclusion of everything and everybody. I believe the policy should be materially changed so as to look forward to a broad policy of general supervision of all forests, public and private, by a regulation of the cutting of the timber and the prevention of destruction by fires, something along the lines established in the Scandinavian, German, and in some of the other progressive countries.

I know the question will be raised as to the right of the General Government to interfere with the individual ownership of private property. The discussion of the legal question is immaterial with this bill; but in passing I can not refrain from saying that it is everywhere conceded that the preservation of the forests is material to the general good, not only for a uniform and permanent supply of timber, but also to attract moisture and thereby in a measure regulate the water fall. If that is admitted, and it seems that it must be, it follows that the preservation of the timber is of such general importance that the regulation of its cutting is within the constitutional control of the Government.

If the private ownership has divested the Government of the immediate right to directly interfere in the regulation of the removal of timber from the forests, it still has the right of eminent domain to accomplish that which is universally required. The Government has the power to do anything essential to the general public. If it can not now fix rules and regulations for the cutting and general care of timber on private lands, it may acquire that right through condemnation proceedings, and as it would not be the policy to appropriate the ownership, but merely to regulate the manner of its use, and that for the purpose of conserving the timber, the measure of damages for such control would not be so great as to seriously threaten the Government Treasury. On the contrary, such a system would be far less expensive than that which is now in contemplation by the Forestry Department.

The Government can not in the present condition of things take the exclusive ownership of sufficient forests to serve the needs of the country with such effectiveness as may be done by regulating the removal of timber from all forests.

It is one thing to conserve timber already growing in the diversity of stages from the first germination of the seed through to the matured tree, and quite another to plant and cultivate forests or preserve an ample supply by acquiring the exclusive ownership of special forests. Under the latter system there must be carved out selected districts to the detriment of adjacent communities, and these districts of necessity are far removed from the people in general, while under the former system the forests will continue interspersed as nature originally contributed to us.

I do not consider that we are justified in levying a tax upon the general public to conserve forests in ordinary places for park purposes, to cater to the enjoyment of a comparative few who can afford to make long trips to visit these reserves. I do not of course complain of, but prefer, to approve the maintenance by the nation of the great natural, beautiful scenery spots of our country, like the Yellowstone, Yosemite, and several other places, some of much lesser note and magnificence. But I do not believe in creating at general expense park systems, except under exceptional conditions, where they are not practically available to the general public.

I now yield five minutes—

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMMOND. How many acres are there in the forest reserve now?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Two hundred and thirty-five thousand.

Mr. HAMMOND. How many acres are supposed to be opened for settlement under this bill?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Approximately 70,000 acres.

Mr. HAMMOND. The balance will remain in the forest reserve?

Mr. LINDBERGH. The balance will remain in the forest reserve as originally provided.

Mr. HAMMOND. And what is the character of the 70,000 acres of land which is now proposed to be opened for settlement?

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is partly agricultural land and partly timber, pine of the various kinds that grow out there.

Mr. HAMMOND. Do you know what proportion of it is covered with pine?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I do not, but a considerable portion of it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Why is there any pine land included in the land to be opened for settlement? Why is more than agricultural land included?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Because they have selected out one compact body that includes more or less pine land. This compact body is around the village of Cass Lake.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is all the land near Cass Lake?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Cass Lake village. There are ten sections that are already made reserve around Cass Lake.

Mr. HAMMOND. Can the gentleman state the number of acres of the pine land included in the 70,000 acres to be opened for settlement?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I can not.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I will.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I understand that this land at this time belongs to the Government.

Mr. LINDBERGH. At this time it belongs to the Government under the treaty—

Mr. BEALL of Texas. This land is situated at the headwaters of the Mississippi River?

Mr. LINDBERGH. This land is situated at the headwaters of the Mississippi; yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. And under the bill that you have called up you make provision for the cutting of the greater part of the timber upon these 70,000 acres?

Mr. LINDBERGH. That has mostly been cut already.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Now, how can you reconcile your proposition with the general effort that is being made all through this country to try to conserve or preserve these forests?

Mr. LINDBERGH. The legal rights in this case were fixed by the Morris Act, and we are simply increasing by this act the amount of timber that the forest reserve people can maintain. Under the Morris Act it was 5 per cent, which was established, and in this act it is 10 per cent.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Yet you are providing for the cutting of the greater part of this timber. The gentleman is aware of the fact that bills are pending here before Congress now asking the United States Government to buy millions of acres of land in order that the forests may be preserved, and looking to the protection of navigable streams?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that the timber authorized to be cut does not belong to the United States.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. To whom does it belong?

Mr. TAWNEY. To the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state further that it is merchantable timber, as I understand it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is what the expert foresters call ripe timber.

Mr. LINDBERGH. A large part of this land is in the district of my colleague [Mr. STEENERSON], and I yield five minutes to him.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a very meritorious bill, and I think the gentlemen who have asked these questions are not familiar with its provisions and with the history of the legislation concerning these lands. In 1889 all of these lands were ceded by the Indians to the United States in trust for the Indians. The act provided that they should be examined and classified into two arbitrary classes, namely, all lands containing any pine trees were classified as pine lands. If there were only one tree on any subdivision of a section, it would be classified as "pine land." The other lands were classified as "agricultural land." The bill provided that all agricultural land should be opened to homestead at $1.25 an acre, and the Indians should get the $1.25. As to the pine trees, they were to be appraised and sold at a minimum price, in the original bill, of $3 per thousand, but in the amended bill of 1902 at the minimum price of $4 and $5 a thousand, according to whether it was Norway or white pine.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. With reference to cutting that timber, it was only the matured timber that was to be cut? Am I correct in that?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think so. I will explain further. The timber was originally sold with the land, but in the Morris Act of 1902, these lands not having been disposed of, having been held back for the reason that the Government desired to have them disposed of under another plan, which plan was provided for in the act of 1902, by which the Secretary of the Interior was to sell the pine on a bank scale. That bill was the first law that contemplated a separation of the trees from the land, so that the Secretary of the Interior was to sell the timber at an estimate, and then when the logs were cut they were scaled by Government scalers and paid for according to the number of feet in the bank scale. The Indians got all the proceeds. Then, when the timber was all cut off, the lands were subject to homestead at $1.25 an acre, and the Indians were to get that.

But the Morris Act provided, in the spirit that now is popular, to conserve the forests by reserving 200,000 acres of the finest pine lands up there as a forest reserve, although, as you have seen from my statement, the Indians owned both the land and the pine, which was simply held in trust for them by the Government, to be disposed of as above indicated. On this forest reserve 5 per cent of the pine trees were to be left for reforestation, and also all the pine on the islands in Cass Lake, which are timbered with beautiful trees, and also on ten sections of land surrounding the lake, also timbered with pine. The boundaries of the reserve were not fixed in the law, but were to be marked out by the Forestry Service. Then all the other pine—that is, 95 per cent of the trees outside of the islands and the ten sections—were to be sold at auction and at bank scale, as I have stated, and that has largely been done and the timber removed, except the ten sections and the islands and another section where the agency is located. On these not a pine tree has been touched.

Now, then, the question arose, Who shall compensate the Indians for their property? Of course after the Indians had ceded these lands to the United States, to be disposed of as indicated and the proceeds placed to their credit, the United States should not, contrary to the treaty, appropriate their property permanently as a forest reserve. The Government could not equitably establish a permanent forest reserve out of somebody else's property. So this bill comes in here and says that the 5 per cent left standing shall belong to the Government and be a part of the permanent forest reserve and the uncut timber shall be preserved for the future and only used under the administration of the Forest Service.

There is a commission appointed by this bill, one representative to be selected by the Indians interested in this property and the other two by the Secretary of the Interior, who are to appraise the value of the remnant of the pine—that is, the uncut portions—and the Indians are to be credited in their trust funds with the amount of that appraisement. Now, the forest reserve, which was originally 220,000 acres, is diminished by this bill, as has been shown, about 60,000 or 70,000 acres. Those 60,000 or 70,000 acres are in the immediate vicinity of Cass Lake. Now, I want to make myself clear on the question asked by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND], who is familiar with the whole matter, being a member of the Committee on Public Lands; and I will state to him that the 70,000 acres that are thrown open to settlement by this act—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINDBERGH. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you want a minute or two?

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to have a minute or two more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. STEENERSON. I desire to say in the time allotted to me by the gentleman from Mississippi that these 70,000 acres that are open to settlement are perhaps some of them pine lands, but under the original act that pine will be sold, and will be sold at auction, and then will be measured by bank scale, and the Indians will get every dollar that they will bring at a correct measurement. Then the land, after the pine is removed, is subject to homestead at $1.25 an acre. So that there is no pine to be disposed of on the land under the homestead law. That comes in the other provision, and I think it answers the question of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND]. I will say, in conclusion, that this is a very meritorious measure, which will preserve the forest at the headwaters of the Mississippi, and the interests of the Government are very carefully guarded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HACKNEY].

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, being on the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs which investigated this bill when it came before that committee, I took occasion to familiarize myself somewhat with the situation.

The title of this bill is a little misleading. It is not an act creating a national forest. The national forest was created under the act of June 27, 1902.

In 1889 Congress provided for opening this reservation to settlement after allotment to the Indians. Then before the lands were disposed of under that act the other act was passed, which set apart as a national forest reserve substantially all the lands mentioned in this bill, making in the aggregate about 235,000 acres of land. Provision was made for cutting timber, as has been stated by the gentleman from Minnesota, leaving a sufficient quantity to cover the timber lands. Now, as has been stated, there has been considerable difference of opinion and considerable conflict, you might say, in the matter of adjusting the national forests with the settlements there.

For instance, on the west side of the reservation towns have grown up, and by reason of the existence of the forest reserve they have been shut out entirely from any source of income or trade, and this condition is sought to be remedied by this legislation. There is an ample quantity left after reducing the limits of the forest reserve, and Mr. Pinchot, the Forester, after a thorough examination of the matter, suggested that change. Therefore the bill throws open to settlement about 70,000 acres on the west side. The lines marked in red on this map which I have here indicated the boundaries as they were, but they have been changed somewhat.

Mr. TAWNEY. Almost all of that 70,000 acres is agricultural land, is it not?

Mr. HACKNEY. Yes; that fact was shown to the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not forest?

Mr. HACKNEY. It is not land proper for a forest reserve. Now, if it were an original proposition to buy land for a forest reserve, there might be a difference of opinion as to the constitutional power of the Government; but here are the Indian lands which were opened to settlement in 1889, and then Congress passed the act of 1902, stopping the settlement and setting apart those lands for forest-reserve purposes. The simple proposition comes up to us now, Shall we pay for what we have got? We have this national forest; it is a forest reserve created by that act; the land is in the possession of the Government, as the act of 1902 provides that from the time of taking over it should thenceforth be a national forest reserve, the same as though created by any other act of Congress or by proclamation. This is a simple process of getting out of a somewhat complicated and unpleasant situation there with respect to the Indian rights, on the one hand, and the rights of settlers on the other, and the question of good faith of the Government as well.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is true, is it not, that the question of the boundary of this reserve has been in dispute between the citizens of that part of the State of Minnesota and the forest-reserve officials ever since the act was passed or the forest reserve selected under it?

Mr. HACKNEY. That statement is correct, and this settles that dispute entirely. This bill establishes the boundary by metes and bounds, so that there will be no further question in the future. Every matter relating to the timber and its growth has been thoroughly safeguarded along lines wholly suggested by the Forester himself, so that the friends of national forests ought not to feel any apprehension about passing this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has this proposition been entirely approved by the Forest Service?

Mr. HACKNEY. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. And the boundary fixed by them?

Mr. HACKNEY. Fixed by Mr. Pinchot and Senator CLAPP. That proof was submitted to the Indian Affairs Committee. I believe that the bill is in every respect meritorious and ought to pass, and therefore I favor it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I think from the character of the questions asked about this bill there is some misapprehension in regard to its provisions on the part of a portion of the Members of this House. The land that will be included in the forest reserve has, in large measure, been selected heretofore, but the formal establishment of the forest reserve is made by this bill. As to different portions of the forest reserve, there are different timber cuts provided for. On the largest proportion of the tract the timber cut is 95 per cent, leaving 5 per cent to be paid for by the Government. On another portion of the tract the timber cut is 90 per cent, leaving 10 per cent to be paid for by the Government. On another portion, a much smaller proportion of the whole, all the timber is reserved by the Government for forest purposes, and all of this timber will be paid for by the Government.

There is, then, carried on the part of this measure two liabilities—the liability of the Government for the land and the liability of the Government for the timber—and the terms under which the timber and the lands are to be paid for are all provided in the bill. So far as the land is concerned, the Government pays for that at the rate of $1.25 per acre, and so far as the timber is concerned for which the Government assumes liability to the Indians, the value of that is to be fixed by a commission to be appointed according to the terms of this measure.

This reserve lies at the headwaters of the Mississippi River, and if there is any portion of the United States where a forest reserve ought to be established, it is in the land about the sources of this mighty stream.

This is not an original proposition, as has been stated by the gentleman from Missouri, for the purchase of land for a forest reserve, but it is a sequestration of an Indian reservation for this purpose, and as the Government takes the Indian reservation, as a matter of course, the Government will pay the Indians for the land taken.

Now, as to the original designation of the land for a forest reserve, that was under the acts heretofore passed by this House, but the formal establishment of the forest reserve is by the act that we are now considering.

As to that portion of the land on which all of the timber is reserved by the Government, the bill provides that the cutting on this land shall be conducted under the direction of the Forester of the Government, so that the whole purposes of the bill are entirely meritorious, and the rights of the contracting parties—that is, of the Indians and of the United States—are amply conserved, and as to the remainder of the lands thrown open for settlement, the Government acts as trustee for the Indians for the purpose of making a sale, but in no sense will it assume any liability to purchase any of the land directed to be sold.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, upon the statement of the facts of the case, that the misapprehensions indicated by some of the questions propounded should be removed, and that this bill, which in all respects perfectly safeguards the rights of both the Indians and of the United States, and which merely carries out a contract heretofore made between the Government and these Indians, ought to be passed by this House. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the other day the Chair ruled that under the peculiar special rule under which we are operating a motion to suspend the rules "suspended all rules." But for that ruling I should not have presumed that a motion to suspend the rules suspended the rules of courtesy and decency prevailing between Members of Congress and gentlemen on the floor.

There is a rule of the House which in substance is:

When a gentleman desires to interrupt another who is speaking, he shall rise and respectfully address the Chair and announce that he desires to interrupt, and the Chair shall say, "Does the gentleman from — yield to the gentleman from —?"

A moment ago, upon page 335 of the reporter's notes, as sent from the House stenographer's room to me, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] rose and turning himself to the gentleman in the chair, temporarily taking the Speaker's place, Mr. DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, said, "Mr. Speaker." The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] continued to speak, and the Speaker in the chair paid no attention to the gentleman from Mississippi. Whereupon the gentleman from Mississippi, further along after more remarks from the gentleman from Ohio, said, for the second time, obeying the rule, "Mr. Speaker." The gentleman in the chair still ignored the gentleman from Mississippi and disobeyed the rule of the House, which made it his duty to ask whether the gentleman from Ohio consented to the interruption of the gentleman from Mississippi, whereupon the gentleman from Mississippi for the third time addressed the Chair, respectfully claiming attention, and said: "Mr. Speaker."

The Speaker pro tempore, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], paid no attention to that, whereupon the gentleman from Ohio said:

How much more time have I, Mr. Speaker?

This was after the third respectful attempt to get the attention of the Speaker pro tempore, without any notice by the Chair, although the Speaker pro tempore had each time heard. The Speaker pro tempore replied:

The gentleman has four minutes and a half.

Whereupon the gentleman from Ohio replied:

Oh, well, that is time enough.

Time enough for what? I presume, if he meant anything, to hear and answer the question which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] desired to propound. Whereupon the gentleman from Mississippi, according to the RECORD, said:

Without any reference to the President's utterances at all and referring now to his deeds, does the gentleman, a Representative of the people of a district in the State of Ohio—the American people—give his approval—

And there he was interrupted by the gentleman from Ohio, who said:

Oh, Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi for a speech.

Whereupon the gentleman from Mississippi said:

I am not making a speech. I am asking a question—whether the act of the Executive establishing a commission without the authority of Congress—

And there he was again interrupted by the Speaker pro tempore, not by the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Ohio having consented to an interruption publicly. The Speaker pro tempore says:

The gentleman from Mississippi is out of order. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.

The gentleman from Mississippi replied, as was the truth, proven by the RECORD read:

The gentleman from Ohio has yielded.

Whereupon the gentleman from Ohio replied:

I yielded for a question, but not for a four-minute speech.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] conveyed in it two absolutely—I want to be altogether parliamentary and not use language which, though true, might be insulting—incorrect statements. The first was that I was trying to make a speech, when I was not, but was making a brief and simply inquiry, as the RECORD discloses; and the second incorrect statement was that I was four minutes in doing so.

I have since read over aloud to myself, timing myself by my watch, all of my remarks made, including the last one, saying that "the gentleman from Ohio had yielded," which took more time than the obviously plain language necessary to couple my question, and it was one-eighth of a minute less than one minute. In other words, the gentleman, after yielding for a question, when the question was sufficiently completed to be made known to him, shut me off so that he could evade a reply under the pretense that I was taking four minutes when I was taking seven-eighths of one minute, and under the pretense that I was trying to interpret a speech, which was obviously not a fact. Now, if there is a Member of this House who believes that the President of the United States, as the Executive, has the right to establish a commission without any authority—independently of his utterances in subsequently saying he would continue it in existence whether Congress consented or not—or who denies that he did thus illegally establish a commission, I challenge that gentleman to arise upon his feet at this or any time and go to the people of his district in indorsement of that piece of Executive usurpation or in denial of the fact.

I am not, however, now so much dwelling upon the fact that the gentleman from Ohio evaded a reply and, after yielding, refused to answer, nor upon the action of the gentleman temporarily in the chair, who took the bit into his own mouth and decided that the gentleman had not yielded, after he had yielded, as I am upon a grave and important question of courtesy between Members upon this floor. Mr. Speaker, I never refused to yield upon the floor except by replying courteously and politely to the request that I either did not have time or did not desire to yield; but after I have yielded I have always yielded in good faith and have answered, or attempted to answer, the question. The statement that I was either taking "four minutes" or "making a speech" is absolutely incorrect, as the record shows, and was incorrect, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] knew, and was incorrect as the gentleman occupying the Speaker's seat at the time also did know, or else would have known if he had been watching the proceedings of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that however partisan we may be upon this floor, we do not by any special rule suspend the rules of courtesy and decency between Members in connection with interruptions. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] had desired not to submit to an interruption, his method of procedure was plain. He could have said, "On account of the brevity of time allotted me," or on account of anything or nothing—he need not have given any reason—"I decline to be interrupted." But in way of bravado and insolent challenge he asked, "How much time have I left?" and, the Speaker pro tempore having replied "Four minutes and a half," he replied contemptuously, "Oh, well, that is time enough." Whereupon the gentleman from Mississippi, being informed that it was time enough, made his interrogatory, or proceeded to try to make it, and was substantially at the end of it when the gentleman from Ohio said that he declined to yield "for a speech."

Mr. Speaker, upon the merits of this particular bill, for fear my position in demanding a second may be misunderstood, I understand from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], who has had long service upon the Indian Affairs Committee, who is thoroughly honest and absolutely careful and very industrious in the investigation of all bills before the committee, that the bill ought to pass, and I shall vote for it. I have merely taken this much of my time for the purpose of dwelling upon the incident which happened and calling the attention of the House to it. Mr. Speaker, I will not be accused by any Member upon the Republican side of this House even, no matter how bitter partisan feeling may have become, of ever having been discourteous. I have read the RECORD. Those are the reporter's notes. Subsequently the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] made a few remarks about my "lack of achievement," and in that reference, I suppose, intended an arrogation of very much achievement, or at least of superior achievement, upon his own part, because he is not the sort of a man, as I take it, who would indulge in violating the old axiom that "the pot ought not to call the kettle black."

I am willing to stand before the country in some degree of comparison with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] as regards "achievements." Neither one of us has ever achieved much that I know of, but I, at any rate, never achieved defeat in a candidacy for mayor of my own village with the Federal Administration behind me as he did. [Groans on the Republican side]. And if I had ever run for the place of mayor of the town in which I live, I believe the people of my town might possibly have elected me to that office.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Speaker strike for the purpose of permitting some gentleman to interrupt me or because my time had expired?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was in error. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I heard several remarks, either intelligent or groans, I am not certain which, upon the other side of the aisle about the time the hammer fell. Is there one over there who has a bona fide interrogatory or courteous request to make of me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I will make one inquiry of the gentleman. He quoted one well-known metaphor. Does not he know another one that is equally as well known and usually quoted in Latin, "de gustibus non est disputandum?"

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and I know the English, free dog-Latin translation of it, given by a man who knew no classics, "concerning disgusting and discourteous things there need be necessarily no dispute." [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is dog translation, but it is, for this case, tolerably good.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, there being no opposition to the bill, I shall now yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield two or three minutes to me?

Mr. TAWNEY. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Two or three minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the gentleman from Mississippi should be suffering from so discontented a spirit to-day. I trust he will regain his equanimity and his temper, and then we shall proceed with the orderly and rational transaction of business. When I had four minutes remaining, and desired to explain a bill before the House, of importance to the country, I yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi for a question. According to his own admission he had proceeded for one minute, lacking one-eighth, and the indications were that, like the brook, he would go on forever. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was no indication of that sort.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. On those indications it seemed to me I was not under any obligation to yield any longer time. What may have happened at the beginning with reference to the failure of the Speaker pro tempore to recognize him for a question I do not recall, or did not notice, but, as regards the latter part of the interruption, I take the full responsibility myself [applause on the Republican side], because I declined to yield further.

I am unwilling to enter into any discussion with the gentleman from Mississippi about our achievements. Whatever we may have done, whatever modest results may have come from our work, are for the House and the country to determine. We are all equals here, and I must suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that it is not in accordance with orderly and fair proceeding, when a colleague of his in this House has but four minutes remaining, to exhaust one-fourth of that time in a question and then to go on with no sign that there would ever be any termination of what he has to state. In conclusion, I want to say that I trust the gentleman from Mississippi will consider this incident dispassionately. I assure him that it shall cause no ill will on my part toward him, but I am convinced that I was justified in insisting upon my right not to be further interrupted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman submit to an interruption now?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do, but I want to make the reservation again that it must be a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a question, but do not take it for granted it is not beforehand. Does not the gentleman remember that less than two minutes ago that with one minute at my disposal I yielded to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS] for a question which involved three-fourths of that one minute?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman from Mississippi may have had nothing to say, or nothing of importance, so that he could yield. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the personal incident between the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Ohio having been now closed, I simply want to recall to the minds of the Members of the House the fact that there is a bill before us, upon which we are about to vote, for the permanent establishment of the boundaries of a forest reserve in the State of Minnesota. This reserve was created under the act of 1902, which boundaries at that time were indefinite and left largely to the discretion of the Department. The bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. It opens to settlement about 70,000 acres of agricultural lands heretofore claimed by the Forestry Bureau, and the present boundary is fixed in this bill as a result of an agreement between the citizens residing in the vicinity of this forest reserve and the Forestry Bureau of the Agricultural Department. I trust there will be no opposition to the passage of the bill, as there was no opposition against the report of the bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to save the time of the House and encourage the House to further legislation, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 234, nays 2, answered "present" 6, not voting 145, as follows:

COMMITTEE CHANGES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following letter, which the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
 HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
 Washington, D. C., May 16, 1908.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
 Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MR. SPEAKER: I hereby resign as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and request that my successor be appointed at once.

Very respectfully,

JAMES E. WATSON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Watson]—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I think that this is one of the mere routine matters of procedure, to which no objection should be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair announces the following committee appointment: Mr. CRUMPACKER, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

BROWNSVILLE AND GULF RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 90, on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asks unanimous consent to take Senate joint resolution No. 90 from the Speaker's table and pass the same. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 90) to amend an act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable waters, etc.

Resolved, etc., That the bill (S. 4809) entitled "An act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to extend the time for the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to legalize the construction of bridges across navigable waters," be, and the same is hereby, corrected so that the name St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railway Company, as used therein, be changed to the Brownsville and Gulf Railway Company.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] a question. I understand that this is a case where a mere clerical error was made in the name of the railroad?

Mr. GARNER. That is it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I, of course, shall not object to that.

The joint resolution was agreed to.

TARIFF HEARINGS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of House resolution 392, and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of the following resolution and agree to the same. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 392.

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means is authorized to sit during the recess of Congress and to gather such information, through Government agents or otherwise, as to it may seem fit looking toward the preparation of a bill for the revision of the tariff; and said committee is authorized to purchase such books and to have such printing and binding done as it shall require, and in addition to requiring the attendance of the committee stenographers is authorized to employ an additional stenographer, and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by said committee; and all the expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the usual vouchers approved as now provided by law.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this resolution explains itself. In last December I introduced a resolution authorizing the committee to have such printing and binding done as was necessary in the transaction of its business, and also authorizing the committee to sit not only during sessions of the House, but during the recess of Congress. I had in mind then, in offering that resolution, that we might be engaged, and probably would be engaged, in preparation for the revision of the tariff during the recess of Congress. I only introduced this resolution to supplement the one that was passed last December and to give the committee an opportunity to employ more aid in prosecuting this particular work. The main object in passing the resolution at this time is to gather such information from the different Departments of the Government as will be useful in the revision of the tariff. I can not speak for the committee, but as for myself, I do not propose to go into a general inquiry or investigation this summer involving the rates in the schedules. I think the industries of the country and the labor of the country are entitled to peace, or to all the peace they can get, from now until after the Presidential election. After that is over I hope the committee will go into the subject of rates in regard to the revision of the tariff, but that is something for the committee to decide. My own intention is, so far as I can speak for the committee, and I believe that I can safely speak for the majority, that this will be the purpose of the committee and its proceedings under this resolution. I do not care to say anything more at the present time, and will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to ask him a question. The question now coming before the House is new to me, and I think new to the minority members of the committee. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if it is his purpose, if this resolution passes, to call that committee together during the summer and go into general hearings upon the tariff?

Mr. PAYNE. It is not. The gentleman evidently did not hear what I said. I said I did not propose to do anything to aid or create disquiet among the industrial interests of the country or agitate the laborers of the country during the progress of the Presidential campaign. After that is over, the committee will be very apt to hear all people who desire to be heard and have any information to give in respect to a revision of the tariff. In the meantime, we hope to gather up from official sources such information as will be useful, coming from those sources, in regard to the revision of the tariff. I do not care to enumerate them now. I do not know that I would if I had plenty of time.

I think I ought to say one word further. The House will see that this seems to be a "direct cut"—I think my friend from New Jersey would denominate it that way—at the Committee on Rules, who have failed heretofore to report this resolution. I want to say in extenuation of that committee that one member has been obliged to be out of town on account of sickness in his family, and it was impossible to get a meeting of the committee at which this resolution could probably be reported, and I wished to have it passed this afternoon, so that when the committee meets Monday morning the preliminary arrangements can be undertaken in regard to this investigation. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who is upon the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the resolution that the gentleman has just offered comes as a surprise to this side of the House and to the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee.

The country has demanded a revision of the tariff for years. The minority members of the Ways and Means Committee and the minority Members of this House have been earnest for a number of years in demanding a revision of the tariff laws; but the resolution that is presented by the chairman of the committee this evening shows the usual tactics of the Republican party. They bring it here undoubtedly as a mere subterfuge, to promise the country with one hand that they are going to do something, and yet holding it back with the other hand to withdraw it when they get ready. The announcement of the chairman of the committee just made proves the statement. If you were earnestly in favor of a revision of the tariff, why did you leave the resolution pending here for months? Why are you preparing to adjourn next week and not consider the question? If you are really and honestly in favor of a revision of the tariff, why are you going to wait all summer before you consider the question, before you take the testimony and the facts that are necessary for the committee to have before they write another tariff bill? Why, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me as plain as the noonday sun that you are merely passing this resolution to try and hold out to those portions of the country that are demanding a tariff revision, to those members of your own party who are demanding a tariff revision, that you are going to do something in the future. How often before have you told this tale? Why, there has been hardly a time when it was necessary for you to face an election that you have not held out to the country promises of a revision of the tariff, that you have never kept and never will keep.

It is very clear to my mind what you intend by this resolution. If you believed that you were going to win the next election you would put it off, beyond any doubt, until the next Congress and then find excuses for not passing it. Or, if you wanted to revise the tariff, you would not revise it by an old Congress that was elected two years ago and put it through by whip and spur in the short session. You would do as you did when you enacted the Dingley bill. You would take your testimony next winter and turn that testimony over to the new Congress to enact a tariff bill after the next President of the United States is inaugurated.

But it is evident, Mr. Speaker, that you fear the results of another election. You merely want to say that you are going to revise the tariff. You want to be prepared, if the election goes against you next fall, to call the committee together at once, take evidence, and drive an ill-considered and ill-prepared tariff bill through this House, and then say to the country that it is not necessary for the Democratic party to revise the tariff, that you have already done it. That is all this resolution can accomplish and all that can be carried out by it. If you are honestly in favor of the revision of the tariff that the country is demanding, authorize the Ways and Means Committee to go to work to-day to take its testimony, stay here, pass your bill and write it on the statute books before the next election, and let the people of the United States pass on it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, said that this bill "explains itself." The gentleman was exactly right. The fool who runs can read what this bill means. A child under 14 years of age who knew the attitude of parties in the country could understand fully what the arrière pensée of this bill is.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have been told for a long time by the gentleman from New York and others that they did not want to interfere with the tariff before an election, because they did not want to "disquiet the business interests." They did not want "to disturb American industries" prior to an election. Now, Mr. Speaker, if hearings upon a tariff and propositions to revise a tariff will disquiet American business interests and will disturb American industries, they will disquiet them and disturb them just as much after an election as before an election. The real object is not to "disturb" Republican campaign-fund contributors. As long as they do not know just what is going to happen to them they will contribute, for fear if they do not it may happen.

This bill ought to be entitled "A bill to enable the Republican party to 'save its face' and pretend that it wants a revision of the tariff and still run no risk by any specific bill of the disapproval of the people who desire a real revision of the tariff." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, next November there is going to be a new House elected, either Republican or Democratic. If a Republican House shall be elected the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee will proceed in their usual way. They will call themselves together—not the full Committee on Ways and Means, except for nominal hearings—and they will proceed to revise the tariff upward wherever it satisfies the special interests and reduce it downward wherever, by the free admission of raw material here and there, and leaving the finished product with the duty which it now bears for some special interests, those interests may be benefited.

If, on the other hand, the country shall go Democratic, or at any rate, the Members elected to the House shall be in majority Democratic, this being the body in which tariff legislation must originate, then, speaking for the minority, we do not want any moribund, derelict committee of a hold-over political party to present partisan hearings at a short session for the consideration of the House prior to the action of the real representatives of the people elected by the Democratic people in the United States in November. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, all this pretense of not "disturbing the public mind" in connection with the slightest interference with the sacred schedules of the tariff is buncombe. The gentleman does not mean that it will disturb the public mind at all in any industrial or business sense; he means that it might disturb the public mind in a political sense.

He dares not, the majority of this House dare not, bring out prior to election a proposition for the revision of the tariff, because the people of the United States are desiring a revision downward in the direction of untaxing the consumer as far as possible, and the Republican party will revise the tariff, if at all, as it always has done, in the interest of the robber barons, for protection. It may now and then find a robber baron who will say "I do not need protection any longer," and it may go through the form of revising downward upon his particular product. But wherever these men, whose counsel has hitherto been heeded nearly altogether by the Republican Committees on Ways and Means, shall come before it and say, "We need for our greater profit a higher duty," it will be given to them, and wherever they say, "We need for our profit a continuance of the present duty," it will be given to them. Those few who can say, "The duty has become obsolete and inoperative, and can no longer do good to us, because it puts no shekels in our pocket," for them the Committee on Ways and Means will agree that the duty shall be reduced.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that a Speaker pro tempore is in the chair instead of the real Speaker, because I have another objection to the passage of this resolution. It is an expression of distrust on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means of the great Committee on Rules, of which I am a humble and inefficient member. The motion by inuendo charges that this resolution which has been before the Committee on Rules, subject to the judgment of the Speaker of this House, the great leader of the Republican party—although under the law he is supposed to be a nonpartisan Speaker of the House—the great leader of the Republican party as chairman of the Committee on Rules, on which sits the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], with a fine Italian hand that can write rules that nobody can understand except himself until after he has explained them and then only by construction his way, in the interest of their partisan operation in the House, upon which committee also sits the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], and upon which I sit also, is by this motion to discharge it to be discredited before the country; an inuendo is going to the country involved in the very motion to discharge that the Committee on Rules has not done its duty. This proposition has been pending before them I do not know how long, and they have not reported it out.

The Republican Speaker of this House does not want to indulge in any hypocritical pretense of reforming the tariff; he is a true stand-patter, a Sadducee of the Sadducees, and stands on his own two feet, and would not report the resolution out of the Rules Committee, as is proven by the fact that he did not report it out; and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has to come in here and attempt to discredit the Speaker of the House.

I told you, a week ago, that there were motions—symptoms—premonitions of weakening on the part of the Republican floor leader [Mr. PAYNE]; and here he is in revolt, flagrant revolt, led by him against the Committee on Rules. He, by this motion, expresses a lack of confidence in that great Committee on Rules, of which the Speaker is chairman and Deus ex machina. I prefer the Speaker's courage, even when wrong-headed, to Ways and Means pretense, even when seemingly compliant.

You are going, if you pass this motion, to treat the Speaker and the Committee on Rules with the same contempt that you treated your own Committee on Banking and Currency the other day, and I daresay that when you appoint conferees you will appoint them from the Ways and Means Committee and not from the Committee on Rules. I plead with you, gentlemen upon that side, to remember the honored years of long service, to remember the gray hairs, to remember the sincerity as a stand-patter of the Speaker of this House, and let us, us Democrats, revise the tariff in our time; but do not let the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], as a mere "stray and loose knight errant" of protection revision, attack the Speaker of this House and express the opinion of the House to the effect that the Speaker and the Committee on Rules have lost the confidence of the Republican majority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from New York will use part of his time now.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have had no requests for time, and I do not know as there will be any more than one speech upon this side.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I know, but I do not want a fifteen-minute speech to close this matter.

Mr. PAYNE. You would not have the speech cut in two in the middle for the purpose of getting into it, would you?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly, I would.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I would not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the gentleman going to have more than one speech?

Mr. PAYNE. No; and I do not think it will take any fifteen minutes; it will not take more than five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, then I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL].

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to say anything on this resolution, and I would not address myself to the proposition were it not that I wish to enter my protest against it as a Member of this House and as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. It does not mean anything good for the people. The hypocrisy of this political trick is apparent to all who are acquainted with the situation. If the desire of the chairman of the committee and those in power was to reorganize the tariff legislation of the country, and in furtherance of such intention they expected to have hearings to gain information on which to revise the tariff, no resolution like this would be offered authorizing the Committee on Ways and Means to sit during the summer recess of Congress, with the declaration made by the chairman of that committee here on this floor that "no meeting of the committee would be had until after the election." Mr. Speaker, why pass the resolution when it is admitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that no hearings will be had until after the election? This would leave only three weeks until the next regular session of Congress.

Does anyone think for a moment that his purpose is to use those three weeks in looking up the facts, in getting figures, in acquiring the information necessary to draw a tariff bill? Why has all the time been wasted during this term—during the last Congress? Why has it been that the Committee on Ways and Means has not investigated these facts heretofore? Why get authority now which will not be used until after the election? I will tell you what this resolution is for. It is a frying pan to fry the fat out of "the interests" for your campaign fund. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You know that this action means that the Republican managers can trade with the interests, can hold the power to have tariff "hearings" as a club over the heads of those corporations now plundering the people. The committee can sit during the summer if it will. The purpose, however, as announced by the chairman of the committee, is not to sit during the summer.

But if any "interest" does not come to time, does not support the present Administration, does not contribute to the campaign fund of the Republican party, this committee can be called together at any time during the recess, and facts can be elicited that would not be very favorable, perhaps, to the party not contributing the funds required. It would be a great persuader and is evidently intended for that purpose. I do not mean to unjustly charge any man or set of men, but I do say that the intention to deceive the people and to force the moneyed powers to obedience is clearly apparent.

Mr. LOVERING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I have only three minutes, and if the gentleman from New York will give me some time I will answer the question.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield the gentleman one minute in which to answer the question.

Mr. LOVERING. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas or the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] whether he thinks it would be wise for the committee at this time to enter upon the work of revising the schedules, whether he thinks the industries of this country in their present depressed state can stand any agitation of that sort? I for one do not. I would say also that I am in favor of a revision of the tariff.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I will try to answer the gentleman's question with perfect candor. I do not believe that the business interests of the country would be injured now any more than they would be later on by gathering information to revise the tariff, but I do believe that the "business interests" of the Republican party could not stand the test. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The four minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The three minutes granted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the one minute yielded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining time, five minutes, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this action on the part of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] marks the complete demoralization of the Republican machine. It has been going by successive stages. It commenced when the Speaker introduced a resolution to appoint a special committee to investigate a matter that was clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. He introduced a resolution to appoint a special committee to investigate whether the tariff should be removed from wood pulp and print paper, and when that resolution was adopted he did not appoint a single member of the Committee on Ways and Means upon the special committee.

I have heard that committee referred to in a facetious manner as the "committee on subterfuge." I am surprised that the gentleman from New York did not consider it proper to send this investigation to that committee. The next step in this movement, or this demoralization, of the Republican machine in the House was marked when several Members on the Republican side were permitted to move to suspend the rules and adopt special orders instead of having the Committee on Rules perform that function. The next step was recently witnessed when a Republican caucus took from the Committee on Banking and Currency the responsibility of preparing a financial bill and referred it to a special committee, which was selected in advance, with the knowledge that the result of its work would be satisfactory to the Speaker and to the men about him who control this House and control legislation.

And now the gentleman from New York, awaiting long and patiently an opportunity to revenge himself upon the Speaker and upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], has moved to discharge the Committee on Rules from the consideration of this resolution and to pass it under a suspension of the rules. This resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules on the 30th of April. It slumbered there for sixteen days. I hold in my hand a copy of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and reported by him from the Committee on Ways and Means and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the 1st of April. This resolution purports to distribute among the various committees of the House the various portions of the message transmitted March 31 to the Congress by the President of the United States. Even if the Republican majority did not intend to adopt the President's suggestions, a decent respect for the opinions of the President of the United States should have impelled the gentleman from New York at least to have buried the message among the various committees instead of permitting it to slumber in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. But, alas, they have been so busy attending to the needs of the people that they have overlooked this resolution sending to the proper committees the message of the President. Is my colleague afraid that some of those committees might break from the control of the Speaker and his associates and report some legislation recommended by the President? If not, why has he not, as has been from the beginning of the Government until this Congress, treated in a respectful and decent manner the messages of the President of the United States? This, I say, Mr. Speaker, marks the complete demoralization of the machine in this House, and it is but a forerunner of the complete demoralization and rout of the Republican party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I promised there would be only one speech on this side, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] came in later and wanted to submit the Illinois platform. If he desires to do so I will be pleased to offer it in my remarks on behalf of the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELL. It will only take a few minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. BOUTELL. I am very grateful, indeed, to the gentleman from New York, as this is so in harmony with the spirit of this resolution. As I had the honor to draft it, I am very glad to have it appear in this manner.

The Clerk read as follows:

TARIFF PLANK IN THE PLATFORM OF THE ILLINOIS REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION—ADOPTED AT SPRINGFIELD, ILL., MARCH 26, 1908.
The present tariff law, which was passed at the special session of the Fifty-fifth Congress convened by President McKinley, and which was signed July 24, 1897, by that illustrious protectionist, has amply justified all the promises and hopes of its advocates and supporters. It has proven the most scientifically adjusted, and, therefore, the best tariff that was ever placed on the statute books. Under its beneficent influence, abundant revenues have flowed into the National Treasury; our domestic commerce has expanded beyond all expectations; the volume of our export trade has constantly increased until within the past six months it has reached high-water mark; the ratio of our manufactured exports has steadily advanced; our farmers have received the highest prices and our mechanics and other workmen the highest wages that have ever been paid, and our citizens of all classes have enjoyed a greater degree of prosperity than has ever prevailed during a like period in any other country.

The broadening of the home market and the increased foreign demand for our products have stimulated competition, and this competition has brought out manifold new discoveries and inventions which have materially altered the cost of production, both at home and abroad, of almost every article of commerce. The long continuance of the benefits conferred by the present tariff has produced an industrial situation that suggests the possibility of securing by the revision of the tariff additional benefits for the people of the United States through a wise continuance of the policy of protection. It is now apparent that in order to maintain the scientific accuracy of the tariff, remove inequalities, and prevent injustice some new schedules must be added to the law, some of the present rates must be lowered, while some must be repealed altogether. The very success of the present tariff demonstrates the wisdom of revising it to conform to the improved conditions which it has produced.

We believe that the people of the United States will profit by a new tariff, but it must be a Republican tariff, a protective tariff, a tariff which recognizes in all its parts the difference between American and foreign wages, the difference between the high scale of living of American wage-earners and the scale imposed by insufficient wages upon foreign workmen.

We therefore recommend to our delegates to the Republican national convention that they urge upon that convention the wisdom of declaring for a revision of the tariff to be made at the next session of Congress or at a special session of the Sixty-first Congress to be convened immediately after the inauguration of the next President, March 4, 1909.

We believe that our tariff should contain a provision for minimum and maximum rates, the minimum rates giving full protection, the maximum rates to be invoked for retaliating upon foreign countries that discriminate against American products.

We believe that two main ideas should pervade all the provisions of the tariff:

First. That the protective principle shall so prevail in all the schedules that American farmers, workmen, and producers shall be given the first call on the home market; and Secondly. That no illegal or unjust combination, trust, or monopoly shall find encouragement or shelter in any of its provisions.

To the end that the revision of the tariff may be accomplished with the greatest possible gain and the least possible loss, we suggest to our Senators and Representatives in Congress that they seek to secure at once the passage in their respective Houses of resolutions directing the proper committees to proceed immediately to collect the preliminary information necessary for a revision of the tariff, so that when the work is entered upon all parties in interest may be heard and the law framed, discussed, and passed without delay and without any disturbance of the financial and industrial interests of the country.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not mind stating confidentially to the other side the Republican programme, as I understand it. Just now the country is recovering from a panic and business is more or less demoralized. It needs rest and quiet. It will have the agitation of a campaign for the Presidency and the next House during the few months that are to come. We do not deem it the part of wisdom to add anything to that excitement or disquiet by considering during that time the schedules of the tariff. We propose first to elect a Republican House. [Applause on the Republican side.] We propose to call the whole committee together immediately after the election, both the Republican and the Democratic end of it, and invite people to come in here who have knowledge upon the subject to impart such information as they are able to give to the whole committee, Republicans and Democrats.

After those hearings are closed we propose to do just what has been done by every Ways and Means Committee since I commenced this business with the McKinley committee—call together the majority members of the committee, as was done with the Wilson bill, and to ask our Democratic friends, or rather to excuse them from attendance upon the sessions of the majority of the committee while we are framing a tariff bill. When we have framed it we will call them in again and submit our work to them, and, finally, we will submit our work to the Congress. It will be a revision of the tariff, Mr. Speaker. It will be a protective tariff; it will be a maximum and minimum tariff, I believe, putting us on an equality with France, Germany, and Russia in that respect, and we will go out with that tariff, as we did with the Dingley tariff, in the firm belief that we will bring renewed prosperity to the people of the United States; that we will not only continue to broaden our markets with the nations of the earth but we will bring blessings to all the people. That is the Republican programme. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 154, nays 92, answered "present" 8, not voting 133, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:
Until further notice:

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. RAUCH.

Mr. STEENERSON with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan with Mr. GLASS.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD with Mr. CRAWFORD.

Mr. KNOFF with Mr. CARTER.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio with Mr. CARLIN.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. MCKINLAY of California with Mr. GARRETT.

Mr. DARRAGH with Mr. BARTLETT of Nevada.

Mr. CAULFIELD with Mr. ASHBROOK.

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. MAYNARD.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. GILHAMS with Mr. LEVER.

For session:

Mr. McMOORAN with Mr. PUJO.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. SIMS. I voted "nay." I wish to withdraw that vote and vote "present."

The name of Mr. Sims was called, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

Mr. PUJO. Did the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McMOORAN] vote on this question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He did not vote.

Mr. PUJO. I am paired with him. I voted "nay," and I ask that my name be called.

The name of Mr. PUJO was called and he answered "present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for change of reference of the bill H. R. 7603, and similar Senate bill S. 890, from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I did not object. I wanted to inquire what the resolution was.

Mr. BOUTELL. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] reserve his objection for a minute?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I know what the resolution is.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would rather not do that, Mr. Speaker. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I know what the resolution is, and, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] had withdrawn his objection, I would have objected, anyhow.

H. J. Res. 178. Joint resolution for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

GRANTING ADDITIONAL LANDS TO IDAHO UNDER THE CAREY ACT.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I make the motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to suspend the rules of the House, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union from further consideration of S. R. 51, and pass the same with the following amendment:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting: "That an additional 1,000,000 acres of arid lands within the State of Idaho be made available and subject to the terms of section 4 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes,' approved August 18, 1894, and by amendments thereto, and that the State of Idaho be allowed, under the provisions of said acts, said additional area, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purposes and under the provisions of said acts."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAPRON). Is a second demanded?

Mr. REEDER. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules, a second is considered as ordered.

Mr. REEDER. I want to ask the gentleman a question. There is considerable wording about an appropriation. Does that change the law, or is it simply a grant of this million acres under this Carey bill?

Mr. FRENCH. That is all in the bill.

Mr. REEDER. I do not understand why that wording is given in there.

Mr. FRENCH. Because the original Carey Act is section 4 of that bill.

Mr. REEDER. Oh, yes; I remember that, now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Kansas is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be well for me to say that the substitute that I have offered for Senate joint resolution 51 is embodied in House joint resolution 150 verbatim. The report upon the House resolution 150 covers the ground so far as pertains to the pending motion I have made.

The proposition is simply this: To pass this resolution will grant to the State of Idaho an additional 1,000,000 acres to be reclaimed under the terms of the Carey Act, which was passed in 1894. The reason for offering this resolution is this: The State of Idaho has practically exhausted the million acres granted under that act. Some of this land has already passed to patent; some of it has been settled and patents are pending in the Department. Something like half a million acres or more—

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FRENCH. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understood you to say that your State has practically used up the million acres heretofore given?

Mr. FRENCH. That is my statement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The State, then, has about done its part in so doing?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much is still hanging fire in the Department here?

Mr. FRENCH. The Department has approved, according to their last statement upon this question, for segregation to the State for reclamation over 700,000 of the million acres. Besides that, the State land board has approved applications covering practically all of the other fraction of the 1,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now you want another million acres?

Mr. FRENCH. We want to have the State authorized to continue the reclamation of land to the extent of another million acres. I would state that there is pending before the State land board applications for 700,000 acres of land in excess of the original grant. If this resolution can pass and become effective this year it would probably enable the State to go ahead with the reclamation of 700,000 acres more of land prior to the convening of Congress next winter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How is this reclamation actually done?

Mr. FRENCH. The reclamation under the Carey Act is done in this manner: The whole body of the million acres is not given en bloc to the State, but rather when individuals or when a company makes application to the State for the purpose of developing an irrigation project—the location of the irrigation canal, reservoir sites, or dams—they submit to the State a proposition with their bid, setting forth the number of acres that they propose to reclaim, the total amount of money that they will ask for putting in the irrigation work, and the amount per acre which they will charge to the individual settlers.

The State land board then passes upon this application. If the State land board grants it, it indorses the application and applies to the Department of the Interior. The Department of the Interior then passes upon the question, the feasibility of it, the reliability of the company, the character of the work, and the land that will come under the irrigation canal. If the Department approves the project, it so notifies the State, and the State is authorized to enter into a contract with the individuals or company for the reclamation of the land by the building of the approved system of irrigation works.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FRENCH. Allow me first to finish this statement, and then I will yield. When the works have been completed by the individuals or company they report to the State; the State then, through its land department, examines the works to see whether or not they come up to the stipulations of the contract—and by the way I will say this, that a sufficient bond is exacted of the parties building the irrigation work to cover all the liabilities assumed.

Admitting, then, that the work shall be approved by the State, the matter is taken up again with the Interior Department, and if the Department is satisfied that a sufficient irrigation system has been put in, the Department authorizes the State to issue patents to the settlers, or rather issues patent to the State to be issued to the settlers. The settlers pay for the water right in ten annual payments. At the end of the ten years they have paid for the water, for the irrigation works, and they assume control, under the irrigation laws of the State, managing the whole system by means of the irrigation districts which are organized under the laws of the State, levying assessments, and so forth, for the purpose of maintaining and keeping up the irrigation system. They pay 50 cents per acre for the land and acquire title to the same in not to exceed three years' time after filing and after cultivating not less than one-eighth of the land acquired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. I will yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to ask the gentleman what is the difference between this bill and the bill which we voted down the other day?

Mr. FRENCH. The difference between this bill and the bill that was voted down on Monday is this: That resolution gave to both the States, Idaho and Wyoming, 2,000,000 acres of land each. This limits the grant to Idaho alone and cuts the grant in two, making it a grant of 1,000,000 acres.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One question more. In the sundry civil bill as it comes from the Senate, 3,000,000 acres are provided, or a certain number of acres, at any rate, to go to Idaho, Wyoming, and Colorado. Now, I have heard it intimated that if we will agree to pass this bill, that provision will be stricken out of the sundry civil bill. What information can you give me upon that?

Mr. FRENCH. Of course I can not give definite information upon a question that is to be taken up in conference. I do not really think I ought.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Have you any assurances from the conferees or anybody that that will be done?

Mr. PAYNE. Let me answer that question. I will say that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] told me this afternoon that he was getting information from the Department on that subject, and expected to eliminate those items from the sundry civil bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood as much. Now, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote for this bill if there is assurance that this 3,000,000-acre project will be stricken from the sundry civil bill. I am not willing to do it if this million acres might possibly be added to another 3,000,000 acres contained in that bill. I understand, of course, that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] would like to strike it out, because I believe he voted with us in opposition to your original bill the other day. But have you any reason to believe, confidentially (you need not communicate its source), that if we pass your bill that provision will be stricken from the sundry civil bill?

Mr. FRENCH. I have heard the same statement from the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has repeated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Simply that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will do his best to have it stricken out.

Mr. FRENCH. I presume so, and I will say I will concede that it may be done, so far as Idaho is concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You do not know that the conferees will strike it out?

Mr. FRENCH. No; but I say, so far as I am concerned, I will concede that Idaho shall go out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I should like to submit this proposition to the gentleman: I should like to ask him if he will not agree to hold up his bill until we find out what they do concerning that; and if they do strike it out, I do not think the gentleman will have any trouble whatsoever in passing his bill. He certainly will have none so far as I am concerned; but I do not desire to run the risk of voting the 3,000,000 acres to these three States and an additional 1,000,000 acres to Idaho.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think the gentleman from Mississippi heard the statement of the gentleman from Idaho that he would consent and ask to have the item go out of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, I understand; but would the item concerning Colorado and Wyoming go out, too?

Mr. PAYNE. I certainly hope so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman help to get them out?

Mr. PAYNE. I will.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the balance of my time until the opposition have used some of theirs.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to mislead the gentleman from Mississippi. I want to say that of course the conference report on the sundry civil may be called up under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Idaho a question. Can we have any assurance that if this bill is passed that it will not come out of the conference as the original proposition that was presented in the House the other day?

Mr. FRENCH. Why, Mr. Speaker, I can not give any such assurance. I personally do not believe so. I do not believe there is any danger of that at all.

Mr. MANN. This is a House resolution, as I understand?

Mr. FRENCH. This is House resolution 150, and I offer it as a substitute resolution for the Senate resolution.

Mr. MANN. I yield back to the gentleman from Kansas the balance of my time.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there is this marked difference in favor of this bill. I voted against the Wyoming-Idaho proposition which we had up here a few days ago, but there is this to be said in favor of this Idaho bill. The State of Wyoming has practically reclaimed little or none of her million acres of land. She has had a right to a million of acres, and has had an opportunity of reclaiming it, but has done but very little of that work. In this case the State of Idaho has done a great deal of work toward reclamation. The State, so far as it is concerned, has practically reclaimed, as we are informed, or will have done her part in reclaiming her million, and there are a large number of claims now to be passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior approving or disapproving what is being done.

Hence I myself feel very much like voting for this bill because the State as a State and her people as a people have come well-nigh up to every requirement of the law, while Wyoming, upon the showing made here a few days ago, has not, and I think that is the criticism I made of the proposition at the time.

Now, if the gentleman from Idaho will permit me to ask him a question, I am done. This report states that in Idaho the system has worked remarkably well, that the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the President, has approved for segregation 643,452 acres, and the State has selected 909,104 acres of the million acres.

Now, then, will the gentleman from Idaho tell the committee, so that we can have the whole facts, why the Secretary of the Interior has not approved all of the work that the State has asked the Secretary to approve?

Mr. FRENCH. The reason is this: We have a national reclamation law under which lands are being reclaimed; we have the Indian reservation law; we have lands that have passed into private ownership under the desert-land act and other laws. Sometimes it happens that an application for segregation under the Carey Act overlaps one or more of these propositions or tracts of land. The Department sometimes finds it necessary to spend several months inquiring of the engineers in the field or the local land-office officials to ascertain whether or not the segregation overlaps.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To the extent of 909,104 acres the State has done her part?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; and more, because others are not included in this report.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I think that I know the situation as to this bill, and yet I am not quite sure of it. Resolution No. 51 appropriated, as I understood, 1,000,000 acres for the State of Idaho and nothing else. Is that right?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. REEDER. That was amended by the Committee on the Public Lands so as to make it two million for Idaho and two million for Wyoming. Now, this has been stricken out so that we can depend upon it that this bill does nothing more than grant 1,000,000 acres to the State of Idaho. Is that all?

Mr. FRENCH. That is the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. REEDER. Now, I wish to talk to you, gentlemen, a few moments in regard to this matter, because I took quite an active part in trying to prevent this bill passing before.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This bill?

Mr. REEDER. This same resolution, as amended to carry 4,000,000 acres. I wish to say, however, before going further, that I am not intending to oppose this bill, because I have it from the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], with the understanding that I can depend upon it, that the conferees have agreed that if this resolution pass, the 3,000,000 acres will be stricken out of the sundry civil bill. I understand that I am permitted to say as much to this House, that it is agreed in the conference that if we pass this bill, the 3,000,000 acres will be stricken out, and it is upon that agreement that I am basing my lack of objection to this resolution.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Kansas will pardon me, I will state that the gentleman has not quite correctly stated what I said. There has been no conference as yet on the sundry civil bill, and therefore there could be no agreement. I said to the gentleman from Kansas that if this bill in relation to Idaho were passed, there would be no question about the attitude of the conferees in regard to the entire provision—that the whole provision would go out if the House conferees had the power to put it out.

Mr. REEDER. I am perfectly free to say that if I thought there was any chance of its staying in, I would oppose this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I do not think it will stay in there.

Mr. REEDER. I wish to talk a little further on this proposition—

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say further to the gentleman from Kansas that it is a legislative provision, and the uniform rule in conference is that the House proposing new legislation must yield if the other House insists.

Mr. REEDER. Then I feel that I am still safe in saying that we can depend upon it that this provision of 3,000,000 acres that has been hidden away in the sundry civil bill will not become a law. I wish now to say something about the reason that has caused me to be against this bill. I do not think any man in the House is more in favor of irrigation than I am, and I do not think there is any man in the House more in favor of the Carey law than I am. I have seen quite a lot of its work; and if I had the time I would like to describe to you some of the successful work that has been done under this law.

But the fact that I knew so well what could be done made me dislike very much to permit any amount of land, especially 4,000,000 acres, to go out of the Government's possession into the possession of anyone if there is danger that instead of being put under irrigation it will go into the hands of speculators. There was some question, and there is some question on this subject, but I think there is little doubt in regard to the law being complied with in the State of Idaho, and I have seen some of their projects. But I wish to say further that the resolution which I spoke of when this resolution was up before for consideration, that I had introduced and that was turned down by the Committee on Public Lands, and the inquiry that it has brought about, considerable inquiry has already been made and more is to be undertaken as to the disposition of these lands. Some things have been discovered that are not very favorable to passing large amounts of land into the hands of the States under this law. But this investigation will be conducted further during the summer, and the chances are that the investigation will have the effect of discovering any place where the law is being violated, and it will also have a further effect of making the people a good deal more careful to see that the law is fulfilled as to these lands.

I desired to make something of a talk on the land question, but I do not believe I will at this time of the day on a Saturday evening. I would also like to occupy some time describing some of the irrigation projects. I shall take some time as soon as I can secure time and discuss these matters more fully. But I shall refrain now because of the hour. I know I can appeal to anyone in this House who has not been here for ten years to attest to the fact that I do not often talk, and I will not permit myself to talk now, when I know you would rather be voting.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If it is a good thing to give a million acres to Idaho, why is it not a good thing also to give a million acres to Wyoming and to Colorado?

Mr. REEDER. I will tell the gentleman. They do not need it now. I do not know but that Wyoming is doing just as well by her projects as Idaho is. I do not know anything to the contrary, but they have not gone so far as to need this until further investigation is made. Then I shall favor giving Wyoming a million acres more and also Colorado a million acres more. Colorado has only used about 70,000 acres out of her million. There are more than 930,000 acres left, and the result is they do not need it.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that all the Government money that is available for reclamation work is practically set aside—appropriated for their projects now in course of construction? If that is not the case, and if Idaho wants to carry on this work of reclamation, it will be necessary for her to get this additional land through the means of the Carey Act, as we now propose.

Mr. REEDER. The question the gentleman has asked I would answer affirmatively. I wish to say one thing further: There is great danger that these works are not being put in sufficiently substantial. I see that they are selling these lands so cheap that I believe it is well worth inquiring to know if these great companies that are building these works should not spend about, say, $2, or even more, per acre, or on a project of 250,000 acres spend $500,000 more, and charge the settlers $2 more an acre, and not subject this Western country to the liability of a Johnstown flood in the future. But this investigation will now be made on account of this agitation. Now I am ready for any questions that any may desire to ask.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What does the Government of the United States get out of this?

Mr. REEDER. The Government does not get anything out of these lands, except it gets a class of settlers who make the very best citizens in the world, where nobody could settle or live but for this irrigation.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I would suggest to the gentleman that the Government gets the same out of this that it gets out of any other lands which are reclaimed. There is no difference.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They will reclaim a lot of waste lands.

Mr. REEDER. Yes; the land is not worth anything as it is. I give this as a reason why I am not opposing the bill. My judgment is that this land will be used for the purpose of making settlement, and I would like, if I had the time, to describe some of these settlements. I will now yield to Mr. MANN two or three minutes. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MANN. Two minutes.

Mr. REEDER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to detain the House. It is very evident that the bill will be passed in the House, and yet I doubt very much the propriety of the measure. The Government has instituted this system of irrigating plants. It constructs its irrigation works at cost and the people who occupy the land subsequently are taxed practically only, or will be in the future, upon the actual cost of the plants. We have no means of knowing, or at least we do not know, what supervision is had by a State over these plants constructed by private contractors; we do not know how long these plants will continue in existence; we do not know how much profit the contractor obtains for himself; we do not know how much profit the cultivator of the soil may be compelled to pay to a private contractor; we do not know how far these grants will interfere with the Government's irrigation scheme; in short we have no knowledge whatever upon the subject before us to-day except that the Carey Act, passed some years ago, before the Government entered upon the scheme of irrigation, has been considered desirable, and because then considered desirable certain contractors now in the business of constructing these irrigation plants still consider it desirable, desirable not from the point of view of the public or the cultivator of the soil, but desirable from the point of view of the contractor who makes a profit out of it; and it seems to me that without knowledge upon the subject, without investigation by the Government officials, without a report from the Interior Department, we might well await such an investigation and report before action upon the bill.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word in regard to the matter brought to our attention by Mr. MANN. I have looked into this matter and I find that these lands are sold fully as cheaply as those under the irrigation projects of the Government. This fact brought the question to my mind as to the quality of work being done on the Carey Act lands. The price charged is the only reason I have to question the quality of the work done, and I believe that the matter should be looked into. It is a clear case, proving that private capital can do work cheaper than the Government can do it.

Mr. MANN. And that they can do cheaper work, you mean.

Mr. REEDER. I must say that is true; and I do believe, from what I have seen and learned of their prices for furnishing water to these lands, that we had better let this 1,000,000 acres go to Idaho, but the matter of the class of work done ought to be investigated, and I am going to assure you that the Interior Department intends to investigate the matter fully. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER] has four minutes remaining and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am ready for a vote, unless somebody wants to ask a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution as amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to encourage legislation upon other subjects I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, pending that I move that the House now take a recess until Monday at 11.30 a. m.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, upon that proposition I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 131, nays 71, answered "present" 6, not voting 179, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 90) to amend an act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable waters, etc.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4186) creating in the State of Minnesota a national forest consisting of certain described lands, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 21844. An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment; and

H. R. 21899. An act providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission with the view to the improvement of the inland waterways of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20345) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

PROPOSED FINANCIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I give notice that I shall address the Senate to-morrow after the close of the morning business on the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] instructing the Finance Committee to report certain amendments to House bill No. 21871, the finance bill.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 39.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein) That the proposed amendments to the Constitution of the United States, as proposed and proclaimed by the Hon. C. N. Haskell as chairman of the senatorial direct-election committee, be, and the same are hereby, heartily indorsed.

Resolved further, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use their best endeavors to secure the submission of the proposed amendments to the legislatures of the several States of the Union for their ratification.

WILLIAM H. MURRAY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
GEO. W. BELLAMY,
President of the Senate.

"IN UNITY THERE IS STRENGTH."

State of Oklahoma—Executive proclamation:

Government is the source from which must spring protection to life, liberty, and the acquisition and enjoyment of property.

Government must be made and executed by man.

Government that does not protect honest capital and enterprise and honest toil alike fails of its proper purpose.

Our form of Government, with its distinct legislative, executive, and judicial branches, should owe the tenure of office direct to the people.

Official position should never be found on the bargain counter, where selfish interest, greedy for riches at the expense of the comfort of the toiling masses, or the morals and happiness of humanity, can buy power with the gold unjustly wrung from honest hands and needy homes.

Government is neither spontaneous nor automatic. It will not create nor operate itself.

The honest people or the special interest will rule.

Which shall it be?

Shall the creatures of God or the creatures of the legislature rule the country?

The past and the present warn us—the General Government must be brought nearer the people.

Bring the United States Senate nearer the people, that just laws may be given us.

Such as to define the duties and render wholesome the administration of the executive and judiciary.

PARTY PLATFORMS AND POLITICAL SPEECH.

All pledges of future action are stale with age and the path of the past is strewn with wrecks of the people's fondest hopes.

Loud acclaim and fierce denunciation still leave the people with empty hands.

The people must act!

When? Now!

Amend the Federal Constitution.

How?

(a) Elect United States Senators by direct vote.

(b) Legalize an income tax.

(c) Make constitutional an employers' liability law.

(d) Cense to interrupt the States in regulation of carrying charges within the State and the prohibition of merging of competing common carriers.

(e) Leave to every State the right of its own people to enforce morality and protection to honest labor, without Federal aid being given the enemy of both.

The preamble and resolutions below tell the story in detail.

The party pledge of legislation along any of these lines is an uncertain subterfuge.

Write them all in the Constitution and you then have certainty, but not otherwise.

Senator — of Oklahoma, in the Senate, and Representative — in the House, introduced these five proposed amendments on —, 1908. Congress will soon adjourn.

The people are all powerful in action, but graft, greed, and monopoly rule when the people are silent.

By virtue of the power vested in me, I, C. N. Haskell, governor of the State of Oklahoma, and in the interest of government rendering equal and exact justice to both the rich and the poor, do proclaim Thursday, May 7, 1908, a legal holiday throughout our State.

That with the suspension of all legal business our people may assemble and confer together I urge that all advocates of good government—

The farmers in their lodge rooms.

The commercial clubs in their halls.

The laborers in their unions.

All societies for the promotion of morals and intelligence.

All you who believe that the laborer is worthy of his hire, that the home is sacred, and domestic happiness should be promoted—

May so assemble and adopt resolutions demanding your Congressmen and Senators' support of these five amendments to the Constitution, and before you rest mail your resolution to Washington.

Go after reforms in a practical manner—all promise and no results discredit your sincerity.

Your duty done, let us pray that beyond our own small State (weak alone in this fight for good government) that our sister States throughout the Union may add their power.

Let us hope that from ocean to ocean the voice of such people assembled in every community, in every State, may add its command.

DO IT NOW! ACTION DEFERRED IS OPPORTUNITY LOST.

Done at the city of Guthrie this 29th day of April, in the year of Our Lord 1908, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-second.

C. N. HASKELL, Governor.

Attest:

BILL CROSS, Secretary of State.

To the Sixtieth Congress of the United States:

Whereas in the Constitution of the United States it was contemplated that lapse of time and changing conditions would necessitate amendments of and additions to the original document, and therefore the making of amendments and additions thereto were provided for.

Time has demonstrated that government by the people, of the people, and for the people can not be obtained by the present method of electing the upper house of the legislative branch of the Federal Government, therefore an overwhelming majority of the people of the entire United States have in various conclusive ways given evidence of their desire that the Constitution should be amended, to the end that United States Senators may be elected by direct vote of the people of the respective States, to the end that our Government in practice, as well as in theory, may justify the motto:

"LET THE PEOPLE RULE."

Whereas government devised for the protection of life, liberty, and the right of property necessarily incurs the burden of taxation, direct and indirect; and

Whereas indirect taxation is far too often made an excuse for special privileges to a favored class and a burden upon the toiling masses of the United States; and

Whereas great estates and accumulations of property necessitate a greater share of supervision and expense to government, therefore it is fair and just that an income tax be authorized by the Constitution of the United States, affording a source from which a portion of the expense of Government may be obtained, and to this end the Constitution of the United States should be so amended as to make the assessment and collection of an income tax constitutional.

Whereas it should be the policy of our Government to protect the toiling masses to the fullest degree of justice in case of disability or death while in the service of interstate carriers and free from responsibility on account of the negligence of his fellow-servant or co-employee, it is therefore essential that the laws of Congress upon this subject should not be hampered or their validity endangered by the narrow provisions of the Constitution as at present. Distinct power should be given Congress to legislate as in its wisdom may fully protect the employee.

Whereas the conditions and necessities of the different States render it indispensable that each State have unrestricted the right to regulate the charges of common carriers and the conduct of transportation business and the right to prohibit the consolidation or combination or merger of competing carriers to the end that reasonable competition shall not be destroyed; and

Whereas time has demonstrated that Federal control of this vast subject is inadequate to the needs of the States, and it being within the power and province of the State to regulate its internal affairs, this subject should have the emphasis of a direct provision of the Federal Constitution—not that the States have ever surrendered this right, but that judicial legislation may not further encroach upon the just rights and powers of the State.

Whereas it has always been the policy of free government to permit the people of the States by their own voice (the majority controlling) to formulate and execute the laws for their local regulation, and where a State, by its people, have elected to prohibit the importation or use of any products affecting the morals and health of the community or the protection of its honest labor, by the exclusion of convict-made goods, the Federal Government should never aid or connive at the violation of such as has been declared to be the expressed will of the people of such State, to the end that doubt on this subject may be cleared away and a definite limit put upon legislation by our Federal judiciary, an amendment of the Constitution is essential.

AMEND THE CONSTITUTION.

There are two methods of securing the submission of amendments to the Constitution of the United States:

(a) The Congress of the United States may formulate and submit amendments on its own motion to the several States for their ratification; but as to this method the people of our country have waited long, weary years in vain, but with a last appeal to that method the five articles proposed herewith are submitted for the voluntary action of our Congress.

(b) Wise, indeed, were those who framed the Constitution of our country in the provision of another method for its amendment. In Article V it is provided that the several States, the source of all Federal power, may, by resolution of the legislative body, two-thirds of the States joining therein and addressing such request to the Congress, make it mandatory upon the Congress of the United States to convene a convention of the States of the Union for the purpose of formulating any and all such amendments to the Federal Constitution as said convention, when assembled, may deem wise and proper, and the Congress shall also provide that all amendments proposed by such convention shall be submitted to the several States for ratification. It is to be hoped that Congress will not, by their failure to act, make necessary the delay and expense incident to such convention by refusing to submit the attached five articles and such additional articles as the people may demand by a reasonable representation of the people.

The action of twenty-seven States of the Union, in requesting a convention of the States, must impress the Congress that patience has almost ceased to be a virtue and that Congress has not listened with even diligence and justice to the source of all power—the people of our country.

Can there be any better evidence of the demand for a constitutional convention of the States than that expressed in the resolutions filed herewith, adopted by the twenty-seven of our grand and glorious States following:

Pennsylvania, Indiana, Texas, California, Nevada, Missouri, Nebraska, Arkansas, Wyoming, North Carolina, Illinois, Colorado, Louisiana, Kansas, Montana, Wisconsin, Oregon, Michigan, Tennessee, Idaho, South Dakota, Washington, Utah, Kentucky, Minnesota, Iowa, and Oklahoma.

Of the nineteen remaining States, more than two-thirds of them stand ready to join with their sister States in this demand, awaiting only the convening of their legislative bodies.

Shall Congress defer longer the submission of these needed amendments to the Constitution, when, by the States above named, substantially two-thirds of the population of the United States have united in a call for such convention?

Shall the people have the opportunity to pass upon these questions without further hindrance or delay, or must a campaign be waged to remind Congress that it is the servant of a free and independent people? The State of Oklahoma has created its commission and directed the presentation to Congress of the matters and things herewith, and humbly prays that the justice of these demands may appeal to the honorable Congress of the United States.

Respectfully,

C. N. HASKELL,
Governor of the State of Oklahoma.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of both Houses concurring), That the following articles be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as amendments to the Constitution of the United States, all or any of which articles, when ratified by three-fourths of the State legislatures, to be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the said Constitution, viz.:

ART. 16. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the electors thereof for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for election of Members of the House of Representatives. They shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes, so that one-third may be chosen every second year; and if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, the governor may make temporary appointments until the next regular election in such State. No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of 30 years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not when elected be an elector of the State for which he shall be chosen. The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided. The Senate shall choose their own officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice-President or when he shall exercise the office of the President of the United States.

ART. 17. The Congress shall have power to provide for the collection of a uniform tax upon the gains, profits, and income received by every citizen or person of the United States, including every corporation, association, or company doing business for profit in the United States, subject to such exemptions as it may deem proper.

ART. 18. The Congress shall have power to define and regulate the liability of common carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce to their servants or employees for injuries resulting from the negligence of fellow-servants or coemployees.

ART. 19. No State shall be denied the right to regulate the charges of common carriers for the carriage of freight or passengers wholly within the State, or to regulate or prohibit the consolidation or combination of competing carriers.

ART. 20. No State shall be denied the right to regulate or prohibit the shipment into the State of any article or articles of commerce injurious to public health or morals, or the product in whole or in part of convict labor.

Senatorial direct election commission of the State of Oklahoma:

REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4062) to amend section 5481 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 669) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for salaries of district attorneys and marshals for Oklahoma, from November 16, 1907, to June 30, 1908, at the rate of $4,000 per annum each, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

Mr. DEPEW, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21844) granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 670) thereon.

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13649) providing for the hearing of cases upon appeal from the district court for the district of Alaska in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 672) thereon.

CALVIN P. LYNN.

Mr. CURTIS. I report back favorably from the Committee on Pensions, without amendment, the bill (S. 4341) granting an increase of pension to Calvin P. Lynn, and I submit a report (No. 667) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Calvin P. Lynn, late of Company G, One hundred and fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BYRON C. MITCHELL.

Mr. CURTIS. I report back from the Committee on Pensions favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 5412) granting an increase of pension to Byron C. Mitchell, and I submit a report (No. 666) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Byron C. Mitchell, late of Company F, One hundred and thirty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. FLINT on the 16th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HARRY S. LEE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I report back favorably from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment the bill (S. 7123) granting an increase of pension to Harry S. Lee, and I submit a report (No. 668) thereon. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was, in line 6, after the name "Harry S. Lee," to insert "formerly Albert Lee Alleman," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harry S. Lee, formerly Albert Lee Alleman, late of Company E, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Harry S. Lee, formerly Albert Lee Alleman."

CHARLES C. WEAVER.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1062) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Weaver, to move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

JERRY MURPHY.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1991) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy, to move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. BURNHAM, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask that both bills be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF STREET RAILWAYS TO UNION STATION.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 902) "authorizing certain extensions to be made of the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed by the House insert the following:

"That the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to construct a double-track connection with its tracks on E street south, thence northwardly along First street east to East Capitol street, there to connect with the tracks of the Washington Railway and Electric Company; also a double-track extension from Delaware avenue and C street northeastwardly along Delaware avenue to the plaza in front of the Union Station, together with a double-track loop located as near as may be to the exterior circumference of said plaza and passing in front of and near to the Union Station; also a double-track connection with existing tracks on G street near New Jersey avenue NW. and thence eastwardly to and along Massachusetts avenue, with such northerly deviations as may be necessary to bring the tracks immediately in front of and adjacent to the main entrance of the Union Station, to junctions with an existing track at Third and D streets NE. and at the northwest corner of Stanton square.

"Sec. 2. That the City and Suburban Railway of Washington be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend its double tracks on North Capitol street southwardly from the intersection of G street to Massachusetts avenue, there to connect with the tracks hereinbefore authorized on Massachusetts avenue.

"Sec. 3. That the Capital Traction Company of the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to construct and extend, by double tracks, the lines of its underground electric railroad from Florida avenue and Seventh street NW. southeastwardly along Florida avenue to its intersection with Eighth street east, thence southwardly along Eighth street to Pennsylvania avenue, there to connect with existing tracks of the Capital Traction Company; also a double-track extension from the tracks hereinbefore authorized on Florida avenue southeastwardly along New Jersey avenue to its intersection with Massachusetts avenue and First street west, thence along said Massachusetts avenue southeastwardly to the said plaza, and with such northerly deviations as may be necessary to bring the tracks immediately in front of and adjacent to the main entrance of the Union Station, thence by such route as may be determined by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to the corner of Second and F streets NE., thence east on F street north to Eighth street east, to connect with the tracks of the Capital Traction Company hereinbefore authorized; also a double-track extension of its lines from Seventh and T streets NW. eastwardly along T street to Florida avenue to connect with the tracks of the Capital Traction Company hereinbefore authorized; also a double-track extension of its lines from C street and Delaware avenue NE. along Delaware avenue to the plaza in front of the Union Station, together with a double-track loop passing in front of the station on said plaza; also a double-track connection from First and B streets SE. northwardly along First street east to B street north.

"Sec. 4. That the companies hereinbefore named be, and they are hereby, permitted to lay duct lines on such streets as may be necessary for the proper operation of their lines, the location of such duct lines to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the cost thereof and all the other costs and expenses of construction, removal of tracks, repairs, and restoration in this act mentioned shall be borne and paid solely by said street railway companies, and they shall be solely liable for all damages to persons and property occasioned by any construction or work authorized by this act.

"Sec. 5. That the said street railway companies mentioned in this act be, and they are hereby, authorized and required, within eighteen months from the date of the passage of this act, and it shall be the duty of each of them, to remove their respective railway tracks and appurtenances from the following streets, and at the time of their removal to repair, restore, and make good in all respects the space now occupied by said railway tracks and appurtenances to the satisfaction and written approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, namely, G street NW., from North Capitol street to New Jersey avenue; C street north, from First street east to Fourth street east; D street north, from First street east to Massachusetts avenue; First street west, from C street north to G street north; Sixth street west, from Louisiana avenue to B street north, and Louisiana avenue, from Fifth street west to Sixth street west; and upon neglect or refusal of said companies to remove their respective tracks and to repave, repair, restore, and make good said space to the satisfaction of the said Commissioners within the time above limited, any said street railway company so neglecting or refusing shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to the penalty provided in section 710 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia regarding the removal of abandoned tracks, and said Commissioners are authorized without notice to remove said tracks and to repave the space occupied by same and charge the cost thereof to such railroad company, whatever may be the manner or cost of doing said work, and to collect the cost thereof in the manner provided in section 5 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act to provide a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia,' approved June 11, 1878.

"SEC. 6. That the construction of the underground electric street railway lines in this act hereinbefore mentioned shall be commenced within thirty days and completed on or before May 1, 1909; and in default of such commencement or completion within said time or within the extension of time by this section specified, all corporate rights, franchises, and privileges of any street railway company so in default shall immediately cease and determine; Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, for good cause shown in writing, extend the time for completion; but the said Commissioners shall in no case grant such extension for a longer period than six months.

"SEC. 7. That where the route or routes provided for in this act coincide with each other or with the route or routes of existing street railways or street railways hereafter authorized to be operated or constructed, one set of double tracks only shall be constructed and shall be used in common, upon terms mutually agreed upon, or, in case of disagreement, upon terms determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which is authorized and directed to give notice and hearings to the interested parties and to fix and finally determine the terms of the joint trackage; Provided, That there shall be two sets of double tracks immediately in front of the main entrance to the Union Station, facing Massachusetts avenue, the most northerly rail being not less than 70 feet from the axis of the south portion of said station.

"SEC. 8. That authority is hereby given the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to use such portions of reservation No. 77 as may in their judgment be necessary for sidewalks and roadways and for street railway use. And authority is hereby given said Commissioners to acquire by purchase or to condemn, in accordance with existing law, for street purposes, so much of square No. 626, lying north of the north building line of square No. 567, extended, as they may deem necessary, and the cost of acquiring said property as above shall be paid by the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company; Provided, That where a portion of any lot is authorized to be acquired as above the said Commissioners may, in their discretion, acquire the entire lot; the portion thereof, when so acquired, lying south of the north building line of square No. 567, extended, to become the property of said Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company as soon as the entire cost of acquisition as above specified shall be paid by it.

"SEC. 9. That whenever, in the construction of the new tracks herein authorized, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia deem it necessary, in order to reasonably accommodate vehicular traffic, to widen the roadway of any street or streets in which said track or tracks are to be laid, such widening shall be done by said Commissioners, the cost and expense of such widening, including the laying of new sidewalks, the adjustment of all underground construction, and of every public appurtenance, shall be borne by the railway company constructing such tracks, and the said railway company shall deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in advance the estimated cost of changing or widening the said street or streets, the work to be done by said Commissioners; and whenever, at any future time, the Commissioners deem it necessary to widen the roadway of any street or streets occupied by the extensions herein authorized, said railway company shall bear one-half the cost of widening and improving such street or streets, to be collected in the same manner as the cost of laying or repairing pavement lying between the exterior rails of the tracks of said street railroad and for a distance of 2 feet exterior to such track or tracks is collectible, under the provisions of section 5 of an act entitled 'An act to provide a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia,' approved June 11, 1878.

"SEC. 10. That whenever in the construction of any of the tracks herein authorized it is necessary, in the opinion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to improve, by paving or otherwise, the roadway of any street occupied by such track or tracks, said company shall adjust the grade of its tracks to the new grade of the street or streets, the cost thereof to be borne by the said company in the same manner as the cost of paving between the exterior of the tracks of the street railroad companies, as referred to in the preceding section.

"SEC. 11. That the arrangement of all tracks herein authorized within the lines of the plaza in front of the Union Station shall be in accordance with the plans approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and all work of construction and extension herein authorized shall be executed in accordance with plans to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and under a permit or permits from said Commissioners.

"SEC. 12. That existing transfer arrangements between the Washington Railway and Electric Company and the Metropolitan Coach Company, a corporation of the District of Columbia, shall not be terminated, except by authority of Congress; and unless said Metropolitan Coach Company shall, within one year after the passage of this act, substitute motor vehicles to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the heretics now used by it, its right to operate its line shall cease and determine; Provided further, That all transfers issued by the Metropolitan Coach Company shall be properly dated and punched as to time limit as provided by rules and regulations to be made, altered, and amended from time to time by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that unless said transfers are so dated and punched the Washington Railway and Electric Company shall not be required to receive them.

"SEC. 13. That the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company and the Capital Traction Company be, and they are hereby, authorized and required, jointly to construct, maintain, and operate, by overhead trolley, temporary railway tracks for passenger service from the Union Station to the intersection of Delaware avenue and C street north, said tracks to be constructed within sixty days from the date of the approval of this act, in accordance with plans approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, said tracks to be maintained by said companies to the satisfaction of said Commissioners, and to be removed by said companies after the construction of the permanent street railway tracks herein provided for within thirty days after notice from said Commissioners so to do; Provided, That the companies herein named may, at their option, substitute permanent underground for temporary overhead construction on Delaware avenue from C street to the southern edge of the plaza, and thence by temporary underground construction to the north line of Massachusetts avenue; such temporary construction to be removed within thirty days from the date of operation of cars over the permanent construction provided for in section 1 of this act.

"SEC. 14. That the railway companies affected by this act shall have, over and respecting the routes herein provided for, the same rights, powers, and privileges as they respectively have or hereafter may have by law over and respecting their other routes, and shall be subject in respect thereto to all the other provisions of their charters and of law.

"SEC. 15. That no transfer ticket or written or printed instrument giving or purporting to give the right of transfer to any person or persons from a public conveyance operated upon one line or route of a street railroad, or from one car to another car upon the line of any street railroad, shall be issued, sold, or given except to a passenger lawfully entitled thereto. Any person who shall issue, sell, or give away such a transfer ticket or instrument as aforesaid to a person or persons not lawfully entitled thereto, and any person or persons not lawfully entitled thereto who shall receive and use or offer for passage any such transfer ticket or instrument to another with intent to have such transfer ticket used or offered for passage shall be punished by a fine not exceeding twenty-five dollars.

"SEC. 16. That every street railroad company or corporation owning, controlling, leasing, or operating one or more street railroads within the District of Columbia shall on each and all of its railroads supply and operate a sufficient number of cars, clean, sanitary, in good repair, with proper and safe power, equipment, appliances, and service, comfortable and convenient, and so operate the same as to give expeditious passage, not to exceed fifteen miles per hour within the city limits or twenty miles per hour in the suburbs, to all persons desirous of the use of said cars, without crowding said cars. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby given power to require and compel obedience to all of the provisions of this section, and to make, alter, amend, and enforce all needful rules and regulations to secure said obedience; and said Commission is given power to make all such orders and regulations necessary to the exercise of the powers herein granted to it as may be reasonable and proper; and such railroad companies or corporations, their officers and employees, are hereby required to obey all the provisions of this section, and such regulations and orders as may be made by said Commission. Any such company or corporation, or its officers or employees, violating any provision of this section, or any of the said orders or regulations made by said Commission, or permitting such violation, shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars. And each day of failure or neglect on the part of such company or corporation, its officers or employees, to obey each and all of the provisions and requirements of this section, or the orders and regulations of the Commission made thereunder, shall be regarded as a separate offense.

"SEC. 17. That prosecutions for violations of any of the provisions of this act shall be on information of the Interstate Commerce Commission filed in the police court by or on behalf of the Commission.

"SEC. 18. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment to the title of the bill.

JACOB H. GALLINGER,
CHESTER I. LONG,
THOS. S. MARTIN,

Managers on the part of the Senate,

S. W. SMITH,
P. P. CAMPBELL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill as reported is substantially the bill that was before the Senate and passed the Senate, except that one section has been added from the House. I think it would be scarcely necessary to read the long bill, and I ask unanimous consent that action be taken upon the report without reading the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. There is one section that I should like to have read. I should like to have the part that is new read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will call the attention of the Secretary to it. It is section 16.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read section 16.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.
